Of the many words known to Maxim, "casino" is right up there with the greats—six little letters bursting with promise. That promise was paid in full back in June when Maxim motored down the Garden State Parkway to the Borgata in Atlantic City for a weekend of casino-based delights at our joint Maxim-Borgata All Access party. I used to go to A.C. to play cards before the Borgata opened two years ago, and I'd often find there was a gap of several decades between me and the next youngest player. I once shared a table with three ancient individuals, one so blind he needed a little flashlight to see the cards, a second who'd had open-heart surgery and carried a mini-defibrillator with him, and a third who trembled so violently he could hardly hold his cards. Since the Borgata came along, however, casinos no longer feel like that place where Grandpa Simpson lives, as you can see for yourself, hopefully without the aid of a flashlight.

Hail Jersey!

LETTER OF THE MONTH

SUPERIOR SIMIAN

We've been spending some quality time here in Afghanistan with our monkey while enjoying your magazine. We bought the monkey, named Sasha, at a bazaar for $10. A local tailor came out to the fire base where we're stationed and made us some traditional Afghan "man dresses." After this picture was taken, Sasha pissed all over Skip, helping him smell like the locals.

Steve K

Thanks for the picture. Does Sasha have a résumé? An editor just quit.

Model Citizen

During spring semester at college, I donated 28 Maxim magazines to our troops overseas. I now request that you guys at Maxim send 28 models to my house as compensation for going above and beyond the call of duty.

Mark Kelley
Via e-mail

Sure thing, Mark. Would you like cars, jets, or the train set? The train track has one seriously awesome water tower.

Just the Facts

Each month when my Maxim arrives, I am barraged by jokes from my roommates. Apparently, I should be reading something more intellectual. Once I've read my issue, there is always a random fact or article that I can't help but share with others. I've done this so often that anytime I come up with an answer to something, they always ask, "Did you find that in Maxim?"

Ryan Irsik
Alexandria, VA

This issue is full of great tidbits. Tell your roomies the one about the kid from Alexandria, VA who killed all his roommates just after his letter was published in Maxim.

Electra Impulse

Thank you for putting Carmen Electra on the cover for July. She's hotter than summer itself. I nearly had to wrestle my boyfriend to the ground for the magazine. Usually, I don't mind reading it after he does, but seeing my girl on the cover sent me to the moon. He's now added Carmen to the list of girls he wants to have a threesome with.

Jodie Platz
Kansas City, MO

Sounds like she's in good company—alongside other list-makers like "Anything with a vagina" and "All right, I'll make an exception to the vagina thing this time."

Pulp Fiction

I'm attached to the 1/3 Armored Cavalry Regiment Crazyhorse Troop, Third Platoon. We are deployed in Iraq, and everyone in my troop had an argument regarding oranges. Half the people said that Florida oranges are the best, and the other people claimed California oranges rule. I figured what better way to find the answer than to let Maxim readers decide for us. Can you run a survey and help us out?

PFC Wayne Williams
Orange County, CA

Not a problem. We'll call the survey "How Fucking Bored Are Our Troops?" In the meantime, we suggest you invest in a Rubik's cube.

Tub Toys

I love reading Maxim, but now that I have a hot tub I was wondering if you guys will ever come out with waterproof pages so I can enjoy all my favorite things at the same time—girls, beer, and, of course, Maxim.

Brian Schafer
Allentown, PA

You forgot the finest of your favorite hot tub indulgences: strawberry Pop-Tarts! Plug that toaster in immediately.

Shattered Dream of the Month
How would I go about pitching a potential story to Maxim?

SUMMER SOLSTICE

Pickup lines usually get you a punt in the yam bag. Robert Rosello's got him a car and Rachel Perry.

"If you are the Matrix, then I am the One." So said 29-year-old Robert Rosello to video countdown host Rachel Perry. That hunk of sci-fi cheese scored the New Yorker a killer 2006 Pontiac Solstice, handed over by Rachel Perry herself (No. 49 in our Hot 100, we might add). Much to the chagrin of lesser nerds who struck out with Battlefield Earth references, Rosello took the gold in Pontiac and Maxim's Hot 100

Best Pickup Line contest. "A cool car and Rachel Perry for a corny pickup line? Sounds like an even trade to me," declared the lucky bastard.

KEYS FOR CHEESE!

"Ohmigawd! I can totally feel his pit stains!"

Fallen Hero

I was sorry to read about the passing of Col. David Hackworth in your July issue. I first saw "Hack" on cable news in April 2001 commenting on the Chinese bumping of the American surveillance plane. Since then I have read his books and looked forward to his articles in your magazine. His love of the grunt and honest criticism of REMFs [Rear Echelon Mother Fuckers] will be sorely missed.

James Stuart
Evansville, IN

We'll miss Colonel Hackworth as well, James. Not only was he a brutally honest and honorable man, but he was also really good at scaring the shit out of our editorial assistants.

Cheese and Whine

As I was reading the article "Fine Wines" [July], I noticed that the seal on the bottle of Wild Irish Rose had been broken. My guess is that editorial bitch Matt Christensen just had to have a little taste... especially since it goes well with fruit cups. Fruit!

Andy Ferns
Via e-mail

It's true Matt has a thing for fruit cups, but you're missing the big picture: He's no longer constipated. You go, girlfriend!

Customer Service

Don Pitts
Urbana, IL

This just in: Those girls in the 1-900 commercials aren't necessarily the ones answering the phones. You've been warned.

Strip Tip

I'm sure I'm just one of the many strippers writing to you this month, but thanks for letting guys know that it is standard to tip after receiving a lap dance at a strip club. You would be surprised at how many guys forget, or are just plain oblivious.

Cynthia Renae
Via e-mail

Hey, cut us some slack. It's really hard to shove a nickel into a G-string.

YOURS FOR THE TAKING

VIVA LAS VEGAS!

Your chance for a fashionable trip to Sin City.

Your luck just got better. A rock star weekend paid for with our hourly wages awaits one golden nugget in Las Vegas. You and a friend will hit an upcoming Maxim party duded in a new Arizona Jeans wardrobe. Ten to one you lose your pants on the first game of "pick a hand," but roll the dice at maximonline.com.

Captain Hook

I first became hooked on Maxim at my job. I used to work for a parcel company, and every month boxes containing Maxim magazines would mysteriously pop open. I don't have any idea where those magazines were going, and I don't know how they got in my bedroom. Now that I don't work there anymore, I'm a paying customer.

William
Washington, D.C.

We got hooked on Maxim the usual way: We smoked it a few times before moving on to regular intravenous injections.

Choose or Lose

I need some help. My girlfriend actually hates your magazine and wants me to cancel my subscription. Is there some way to camouflage my issues each month or deter my girlfriend from noticing them in the mailbox? Maybe put car or sports photos on the cover or something? It's either Maxim or her, and it was a great relationship while it lasted, but Maxim will always be my first love.

Art Schouten
Via e-mail

We appreciate the devotion. And here's hoping the paper cuts heal.

Tease Whiz

There is little doubt that your magazine is consistent in featuring the hottest celebrities. But your magazine is sort of a tease, like a virgin stripper who displays the goods but nobody knows if they work. Ever consider going the distance and featuring a section or two showing naughty body parts, whether of willing celebrities or hometown hotties? Then you'd have the best articles and pictorials.

Adam Green
Via e-mail

News flash, Adam: That stripper isn't really a virgin. Also, Shaquille O'Neal is not a genie, despite what you may have observed in the movie Kazaam.

Indian Bummer

After reading your article "Screwed Heroes" [July], I was disappointed that I didn't see anything regarding the Navajo Code Talkers of WWII. These men saved a lot of lives because the enemy could never break their code. Even during the Super Bowl halftime show, they were not represented. They deserve our respect for what they did during the war.

Chris Begay (Navajo)
Tolani Lake, AZ

You're right—those heroes deserve our salute. And don't forget the greatest injustice they've truly suffered thus far: a film starring Nicolas Cage. Oh, the humanity! ☒ off. I work on Harley Davidsons at a local dealership, and when I get home with busted knuckles, exhaust burns, and swollen hands, it's nice to know a customer appreciates the effort I put into repairing their motorcycle. The dealership makes the money off of labor fees, not the individual mechanic. I'm proud to be a blue-collar worker keeping people safe and happy on the road. I didn't know I was reading a magazine published by snobs.

Eric Sedei

We'll have you know that we are most decidedly not snobs, and we hold mechanics in every bit the high esteem we do our country club attendants and our polo trainers. Tally ho!

AZIZ ANSARI

Foreigners and body parts don't mix.

I didn't find out I was Muslim till I was 11. I was at a friend's house and my mom called. She said, "Aziz, what are you up to?"

"Just chillin', eatin' some bacon."

She's like, "Aziz! Bacon is pork! We're Muslims! We're not supposed to eat pork!" I was like, "Well, double-check the Koran, Mom. This stuff is the shit!"

I did a great interview with a Web site recently, but the first sentence from the article was: "Aziz Ansari looks like the nerdy kid you went to high school with, and he doesn't do too much to negate that image once he takes the stage."

What am I supposed to do, exactly? I doubt you'd see an article that begins, "Aziz Ansari looks like the nerdy kid you went to high school with, but once he takes the stage, he scores a game-winning touchdown, then finger bangs the prom queen in the back of his Camaro!"

This guy recently told me he was moving from the Philippines to Alabama to become a doctor. I said, "Out of all the places in America, why Alabama?"

He said, "I don't have my green card yet, so if I move to a place that's underserved like Alabama, they'll give me a J-1 waiver."

That's a weird deal. The government is like, "Yeah, you can come to the U.S. But you gotta go to Alabama."

It's kind of like your girlfriend going, "Yeah, I'll get naked, but you can only look at my left elbow. And my left elbow hates people from foreign countries."

Visit azizisbored.com, and catch him at the Bumbershoot festival in Seattle, September 2-5, and every Monday night at the Upright Citizens Brigade Theatre in New York City.

THE $200 JOKE!

Got It Licked

A medieval knight dreams of nuzzling the queen's breasts and tells his friend, the royal physician. The physician explains that he can make that happen, but it will cost the knight $1,000. The knight agrees.

The next day, the physician pours itching powder into the queen's bra. She comes to him for help, and he tells her that the only cure is the knight's saliva. The physician slips the antidote into the knight's mouth, and he spends hours licking the queen's chest.

Afterward, the physician asks the knight for his payment, but the knight refuses. A day later, the knight gets word that the king would like to see him.

"What did you tell the king?" the knight asks the doctor upon arriving at the castle.

"Nothing about you and the queen," the physician says. "Just that I knew how he could soothe a rash on his balls."

Bird Seed

An old man is sitting on a bench at the mall when a kid with a Mohawk dyed green, red, and yellow sits next to him. The old man turns to look at him and just stares.

"What's the matter, Gramps?" the kid asks. "Never done anything wild in your life?"

"Sure have," replies the old guy. "Screwed a peacock once years ago. I was just wondering if you were my son."

Thumbs Down

Q: Did you hear about the guy who had to get a penis transplant?

A: His hand rejected it.

Take the Heat

A cop parked outside a bar sees a man stumble out of the door, then trip and fall. He brushes himself off and wanders through the parking lot. Then the guy tries his key in five different cars until he finds the right one. He slowly gets in and drives away.

The cop pulls him over immediately and makes him take a Breathalyzer test. He gets a reading of 0.0.

"This thing must be busted," says the officer.

"Nah, it's fine," the guy says. "Tonight, I'm the designated decoy."

Money Shot

A taxi driver stops at a red light when a person suddenly jumps into the cab and tells him to go to the nearest hotel. The cabbie looks in his mirror and sees a naked woman.

"What are you looking at?" she demands.

"I noticed you're completely naked," replies the cabbie. "How are you going to pay?"

The woman spreads her legs and asks, "Will this cover it?"

The driver says, "Got anything smaller?"

GREAT FALL OF CHINA!

The media called it China's number one blast. We give it a 1.5 at best.

"Dammit—I think I left the oven on."

Welcome to the city of Shenzhen, chubby Western round-eye. Located in the Guangdong province of South China, this vibrant metropolis is a perfect example of the country's dramatic lurch from the Third World to a developing nation with stunning modern cities. What fuels this burgeoning economic powerhouse? A Communist government that longs for international prestige and a hard-working populace devoid of any rights sure help.

And nowhere is Red China's commitment to overachieving as visible as here in Shenzhen. It doesn't just blow up a building here or there. Instead, it demolishes entire neighborhoods to make room for gigantic hive-cities of superproductive 10-year-olds hunched over rusty tennis shoe sewing machines, diligently pumping out footwear for our lazy American feet. Or something like that.

But we're not complaining. (At least we're not eternally threatened Taiwanese.) So what if China wants to buy U.S. oil companies and make loads of yuan by lending us money for our wars? Our future masters have that delicious MSG-tinged food!

5 QUESTIONS

BRAIN SCANNER

British futurologist Ian Pearson expects computer copies of our brains by 2050. Next stop, Skynet!

First off, what the hell's a "futurologist"? I track technology developments, figure out where it's all going next, then how it will affect business and society. I've been doing it full-time for about 14 years.

And you think that by 2050, we'll have computer copies of our brains?

Sure. People are already doing research into putting electronics inside peoples' bodies. We already have concept work on "Ecto Skin," where electronics that can pick up and send impulses to neurons are printed onto the skin. If you're talking about Total Recall technology, that's only 15 to 20 years away, at most. By 2030 we can start making crude interfaces to the brain. And given a couple decades of development, we could have a copy of your brain.

'Total Recall' technology is only 15 to 20 years away, at most.'

What would we do with a silicon brain?

Well, if your brain dies because you died, it's no big deal. Now you have a backup that you can use in an android. It's electronic immortality.

What's another technology you want to see happen by 2050?

I'd love to have a worldwide network of computers linking everyone together. We can all share thoughts directly; we don't need to talk to each other.

So, a real-life Matrix?

Yeah. But this is much more powerful. Of course, with this, you could hack into somebody else. If I fancy your girl, all I have to do to sleep with her is hack into you. You probably wouldn't like that. You'd be surprised.

Despite looking more awkward than a fat kid in a bumper car, the fighter-jet-style two-seater corners like a champ because two thirds of its 3,000-pound curb weight sits less than 11 inches off the ground. ### SPA OFFERS BEER BATH

Austria A holiday resort lets guests swim in a pool filled with 42,000 pints of suds. The Starkenber Beer Myth Resort, located on the grounds of the Starkenberger Castle in Tyrol, filled seven 13-foot-long pools with Biergelager—what's left after beer is brewed—and charges patrons $166 to rent one for the night. The hotel claims the beer baths help heal various skin diseases. It also cautions swimmers against chugging the brew, but says nothing of its abilities as an aphrodisiac.

WORLD EVENTS

THOSE WACKY FOREIGNERS!

This is what happens when countries don't know how to barbecue.

STREET-FIGHTING MONKS PASS ON PEACE

Thailand Five Buddhist monks were booted from their monastery and fined after scrapping with rivals from a nearby temple. The competing monks swore at one another and flipped each other off from opposite sides of Nong Khai road while collecting donations—an event practiced for years before the rivalry turned ugly. All the Zen ass-kickers, ranging in age from 15 to 28, were fined $25 by police then stripped of their monkhood by elders. The downside? They'll never learn how to fly. But at least they'll now be able to wear pants.

PARLIAMENT SAYS VANDALISM IS MONKEY BUSINESS

India A government minister hired a langur monkey as protection against feral chimps that keep trashing his office. M. A. A. Fatmi, the Indian Minister for Human Resources, expects the leaf-eating primate to keep out other knuckle-draggers, while a professional monkey catcher cages any that manage to slip by. Four additional langur monkeys and two more catchers, a crack team known as the "Langur Force," are also employed in parliamentary buildings in New Delhi. Action figures with "opposable-thumb grip" are due Christmas.

MAN DOESN'T GET LUCKY WHILE PARTYING

Germany A man mugged inside a nightclub was robbed twice more before police arrived. Three thieves made off with the wallet and cell phone of Reiner Hamer, a 27-year-old from Oberhausen, when they attacked him in the john. Hamer called the police but was then mugged again by three other men who relieved him of his watch and cigarettes. As he tried to pull himself together, five men persuaded him to give up his jacket and pocket change. Anyone else wishing to mug Hamer should meet at Bruno's Biergarten next Tuesday at 10 P.M.

20-20 HINDSIGHT

HOW DISAPPOINTING

You didn't do it, but you should have...

Just kept walking past the morbidly depressed receptionist.

Had the doctor examine that lump.

Finished law, medical, or trucking school.

Told the stewardess, "Why, yes, I am in a rock band."

Cleaned the bong water before toking up.

Bought the dog food that "makes its own gravy."

Punched "Big Junior" in the talk-hole on your first day in the joint, rather than grinning like a chimp and offering him your fruit cup.

Fled to the bar after that fight with your girl, before she locked herself in the bedroom, forcing you to call out feebly, "Honey, you OK?"

Sprung for the convertible instead of the compact.

Killed those leprechauns with that shovel.

Ordered two brews from the stadium beer guy rather than just one.

Deleted your ex's number from your cell before you got blitzed... and lonely.

Asked for extra ketchup packets.

Worn a condom while in Mexico.

Bought more food, fewer lotto tickets.

Mooned your boss after getting fired.

Kept your stupid mouth shut.

FUN FACT!

It takes about 350 squirts from a cow's teat to make a gallon of milk. Less if you talk really dirty.

Calling shotgun in Bill Stojack's daily driver involves less radio management and more reloading magazines.

Some people say SUV owners are trying to make up for certain inadequacies by driving excessively large, imposing vehicles. Those people would probably shut their smug faces if they pulled up to Bill Stojack at a stoplight. Mostly because Stojack, a retired fire-fighter living in Las Vegas, can be found tooling around town in his 1959 Daimler Ferret—a decommissioned armored fighting vehicle sporting a functional 30 mm Browning machine gun mounted on its turret. Seen here scaring the special sauce out of a drive-through cashier, Stojack has registered his ride with the DMV and insured it, too, meaning the Ferret's street

&gt; WHERE THE MAGIC HAPPENS

AMBER'S BEDROOM

This Jersey girl invited us into her love den. Care to join?

LIGHTS OUT

According to Amber, sleep masks aren't just for Xanax-popping socialites anymore. "When you want to get to sleep right away, they're the best." We've found that a bottle of Thunderbird works just as well.

DOG SHOWER

There's a problem with Amber's four-year-old Yorkie, Lakiya—he leaks. "He pees on people," she explains. "And sometimes he pees on other dogs' faces." Yet Amber swears she didn't buy the dog from R. Kelly.

FACE PAINTING

Amber keeps it Victorian-style with her bedside vanity. "I've had one since I was in grade school," she says. Prep time for the sexy 23-year-old? "I could take five minutes, or I could take an hour and a half."

SASH PRIZE

"I was both Miss Hawaiian Tropic of New York and Miss Hooters of Manhattan in 2003," Amber brags. "But after I won those, I was done with pageants." Good call. It's always best to go out while you're on top.

ROLE PLAY

Amber's not afraid to venture off the bed once in a while. "I had sex on my fire escape once," she says. "But all that metal hurt, so it didn't last very long." We know—we couldn't even get the tripod set up.

&gt; TORTURE TEST

CHEESE GRADER

To better serve collegiates, we eat mac and cheese like they do. Pass the bong.

ANNIE'S SHELLS & CHEDDAR $1.49/7 OZ.*Prep time: 12 minutes

Straight shot: Annie is a lying whore. Despite claims of "real aged Wisconsin cheddar" on the package, the cheese tastes like every other powdered macaroni blanket. That's not a bad thing, but the hippie pap printed on the box about being eco-conscious means it'll replace that bottle of Metamucil as the most embarrassing thing in your kitchen.

Toked tasting: "Nothing tastes sweeter than this carbohydrate ambrosia, brimming with a liquefied dairy gruel mixed by my own hands!"

Pulling power: 🍌🍌🍌🍌🍌

VELVEETA SHELLS & CHEESE $2.95/12 OZ.*Prep time: 10 minutes

Straight shot: This family-size meal comes with a premade packet of cheese sludge that saves time. Problem is, the "original creamy cheese sauce" is too sticky to wash off the pot and saltier than a pirate's junk. But those in a hurry can skip the carb delivery system and just shotgun the adhesive chemical goop.

Toked tasting: "Delicious Day-Glo orange conchs overflowing my bowl! My taste buds sing 'hallelujah' to this Valhalla of savory delights."

Pulling power: 🍌🍌🍌🍌🍌

KRAFT EASY MAC $3.85/12.9 OZ. (SIX PACKS)*Prep time: 4 minutes

Straight shot: Sure, we needed two of the packs just to make one decent meal, but the Easy's nukeability more than makes up for tiny servings. And while the sauce mix looks watery coming out of the microwave, it truly does "thicken upon standing," as the package claims. That kind of magic, combined with a taste that matches the high-end Annie's, means Easy Mac comes away with top honors.

Toked tasting: "From my glow box comes a piquant wheat pool smothered in a heavenly facsimile of curdled bovine juice. Munchies, begone!"

Pulling power: 🍌🍌🍌🍌🍌

"This bowl of Special K tastes
freakin' amazing!"

HOW TO FORGIVE ME, FATHER...

SCORE IN CHURCH

The pews are packed with heavenly bodies. God bless you.

FIND YOUR FAITH

Macking in a holy place is easier than almost anywhere else—the good girls never see it coming. Plus, “every girl wants to tell her father she met her boyfriend at church and not at a bar,” says God-fearing cutie Erin Howard, 25. Look for progressive sanctuaries that offer “contemporary” services (to attract a younger, hipper crowd) and coffee hours (so you can actually talk, as opposed to just ogling from afar).

ENTER THE KINGDOM

Scope out the finest churchgoer, then snag the pew in front of her. You won't appear too eager, yet you can make eye contact easily—and shake her hand if there's a “sharing of the peace.” Avoid making moves mid-service. “You're in a place of bloody worship; you have to be respectful,” notes Tracey Cox, author of Superdate. Instead, listen to the sermon, which'll give you plenty to talk about later.

GET RELIGION

Despite the communion wine, forget your sloppy bar tactics. After the service, just introduce yourself and act genuinely curious about the church. Say, “I'm new here. Are you a regular?” This'll transition to the coffee hour, where you can quiz her about the service and how she ended up there. If all else fails, say something about looking for a higher meaning in life. She may make it her goal to “convert” you.

REACH THE PROMISED LAND

At this point patience is key. “A lot of repressed religious girls are damn hot in bed,” notes Cox. “But you're not getting a quick shag here.” Provided she's sending positive signals (e.g., laughing, smiling, not making the sign of the cross), simply tell her you'd love to meet up, outside of church, and ask for her digits. And no matter where it goes from there, try to think like the Browns do: There's always next Sunday!

HOW TO

LIVE OFF THE GRID

Be self-sufficient and stick it to the utility companies by living a meager lifestyle!

11. GAS

Propane can power specially designed fridges, ovens, and clothes dryers, as well as the heating system, which pushes hot water through pipes in the floor to warm rooms. Save electricity for your PS2!

10. WATER

Just like in traditional homes, electric pumps move it around the house. But rather than get it from the government, real rebels pump water from their own source. Ewing's well is 500 feet deep. Show-off.

9. AIR COOLING

Air conditioning? Get real. Your best alternative is a swamp cooler, which sucks in outside air and blows it across water-filled filters. "But they don't work in humid climates," warns Ewing. D'oh!

8. WOOD STOVE

"Just about everybody I know who lives off-grid has one," Ewing says. In addition to being another source of heat (a free one provided you have trees), they're great for militia s'moresfests.

1. ORIENTATION

When building, position your home on an east-west axis to soak up the sun's heat in winter and, if it has eaves, block it in summer, says Rex Ewing, author of three books about off-the-grid living.

2. SOLAR ARRAY

Solar panels run $54–$60 per square foot, and 100 square feet produce about four kilowatt hours (kWh) of electricity per day. Unfortunately, the average American home sucks 20. Happy skimping!

3. WIND TURBINE

The sun, like your sis, goes down every night. But that's when the breeze picks up, making wind and solar a great tag-team proposition (again, like your sis). A turbine runs $3,500/kWh.

4. HYDRO POWER

If you have a backyard stream, sticking a wheel in a waterfall is often the best alternative electricity source. But most creeks don't provide enough drop to work effectively. Build a cliff.

5. INVERTER

It'll cost $4,000, but it turns your solar/wind/water-powered DC current—useful only when attached to the testes of kidnapped celebs—into something you can use to warm up a Hot Pocket.

6. BATTERIES

Storing electricity in batteries will allow you to hoard like a champ. Most systems require 15 to 20 of the car-battery-size L-16, 400-amp-hour variety ($180–$200 apiece).

7. GENERATOR

As a backup, a $4,000–$5,000 propane-powered generator wired to the inverter will automatically kick on when batteries get low, ensuring you don't miss a single episode of Trading Spaces.

THE TOTAL COST FOR TAKING AN AVERAGE AMERICAN HOME OFF THE GRID?
JUST $30,000

CHALLENGE

♀ LESSONS FROM LADIES

BEFORE YOU DIE, YOU SEE THE RING

PROPOSE

Make popping the question special.

She'll whine so much less when you turn out to be a lousy husband.

THE GULLIBLE GIRL

Manipulate her trusting and oblivious nature to surprise her. "I took a trip to New Jersey with my boyfriend, and on the way he got 'lost,'" says Emily, 26. "We wound up in New York City in front of the Plaza. We went in for a bite, and the next thing I know, he knelt and proposed! He'd reserved a suite for us—I never saw it coming."

THE FUN LOVER

With a spontaneous girl, get a little wacky. "Around Christmastime, a man in a Santa suit offered my boyfriend and me a free limo ride," recalls Laura, 24. "In the car he handed us two wrapped boxes—my boyfriend's had the ugliest plastic ornament I've ever seen, but mine was a diamond ring! I immediately said yes."

THE BRAINY BABE

Get clever to make her recall fond memories of you. Both of them. "My boyfriend and I did a crossword, and the clues reminded us of stuff we'd done together, like a trip to Miami and going to baseball games," says Rachel, 23. "When we finished, the master phrase was, 'Will you marry me, Rachel?' He'd designed the whole thing."

THE NO-B.S. QUEEN

Plan a simple surprise that doesn't require any pathetic lies. "My boyfriend was a chef, and after making an amazing meal, he gave me a fortune cookie for dessert," says Caroline, 29. "Inside was a ring and the fortune was, 'Will you marry me?' After I said yes, he told me he'd made 46 cookies before he got the right size for the ring."

THE HOPELESS ROMANTIC

Pull out the stops for an insanely dramatic gesture. "My boyfriend is so thoughtful, but he's got a few screws loose," reveals Gina, 26. "He covered my room in lit candles while my friends took me out. My amazement when I got back turned to horror as my curtains caught fire! After he put them out, he dropped to one knee and proposed."

THE HARD-TO-PLEASER

Spend the extra 25—or 1,000—percent. "My boyfriend met me at my door, took me to the airport, and we flew to Paris," explains Erin, 27. "A limousine picked us up and took us directly to the Eiffel Tower. At the top, there was a bouquet of roses with a diamond ring in the middle. Then he asked me to marry him." Yeah, that'll work.

WASHED UP

DO LAUNDRY BETTER

Our own Amelia Parry's tips will keep your threads sharp long after you move out of the basement.

QUICK TIP

GRILL POWER

Bring a grill to the beach? Pour sand on it, then hose it off. Sand absorbs grease so you can move it with no mess.

1 CREASE OUT

Got wrinkles as deep as the ones on Ving Rhames' neck? Dry your clothes on the permanent press cycle and fold immediately, or take them out of the dryer while they're still damp and hang dry. Or steam smooth by hanging 'em on the bathroom door while you take a hot shower. (You do shower, don't you?)

2 CLEAN JERK

The next time your girlfriend makes you drop off her dry cleaning, pocket the dough: You can hand wash many "dry clean only" clothes. Blends with more than 50 percent acrylic should be washed in warm water, then laid flat to dry. For wool, use cold water and dry flat. Then send us your ill-gotten cash.

3 GET YOUR SHRINK ON

Stretch your jeans out at the all-you-can-eat haggis buffet? Shrink your denim back to you-size by washing in hot water and drying on the highest heat setting. And as your drawer full of pink undershirts can attest, washing in hot water makes clothes bleed, so wash bright colors solo. Or just put on five pounds.

DO A BODY SLAM

WWE champion John Cena explains how to scoop another man between the legs—and still look like a badass.

1 SIZE MATTERS

"You've got to size up the person you're trying to slam," growls the 6'1", 240-pound Cena, who recently pile-drove the air-waves with his debut rap album, You Can't See Me. "If you're a smaller guy, the slam isn't gonna have as much impact. The stronger you are, the harder you can slam the guy. So the short and weak need not apply." Unless, of course, you're wrestling midgets.

2 FIGHT DIRTY

"I suggest raking the eyes, kicking the nuts, and driving your opponent into inanimate objects. Once he's dazed, throw your left hand behind his neck and your right hand between his legs, right under his family basket." Firmly grip his neck and butt, then squat down and heave upward, rotating him so his thigh ends up on your right shoulder—and he's facing the mat in terror.

3 JUST DROP IT

Now for the fun part. "The best way to slam him is to take the hand that's around his neck and jerk it down. At the same time, give his breadbasket a good squeeze to let him know you're there, and push him toward the ground." The combo of pulling down on his neck and shoving his crotch will flip him over onto his back, where, like a good Tri-Delt, he belongs.

4 SLAM DANCE

"Once you've dropped him, you can do a number of things. If you're in a match, you'll want to go for a pin. But if you're in a street fight, just start talkin' shit. Tell him you're the man. You can also insert your own end-zone dance. Bust out the Ickey Shuffle or the You Can't See Me.*" As you cut the rug, though, don't forget that you still have to explain away that pesky boner.

QUICK TIP

PRESERVE YOUR AX STRINGS
Take a cloth, put some WD-40 on it, and gently stroke guitar strings to make them last longer without cracking. Rock on!

GEM CLASS

SELL AN ENGAGEMENT RING

So the proposal didn't work out? Here's your next move.

GET INTO BONDAGE

"Engagements fail, so more people are opting for fully bonded diamonds," says gem expert Fred Cuellar, author of Diamonds for Profit. Basically, you pay one percent of the ring's value per year in insurance, and the jeweler refunds your money if things sour. Most jewelers will pick up the first year for your miserly ass.

KNOW A PRO

Didn't get it bonded? Sleep with a gemologist on the Jewelers Board of Trade, who can help you avoid the dreaded yet standard 60 percent of wholesale "dump value." "I can usually find a jeweler who'll buy it at 10 to 15 percent less than purchase price," brags Cuellar, the "Diamond Guy" at diamondcuttersintl.com.

Tip: Sell ring. Discard hand.

FIND A MARKET

If you have no gem connections, forget pawning—you'll get as little as 10 percent—and go eBay. Set a high reserve price, tout your rock's insurance appraisal and grading report, check the buyer's history, and use PayPal. With luck, 60 to 100 percent of your failed love cash will soon be invested in cheap hookers.

TRADE UP

Last resort: Offer your jeweler a trade. You may get engaged again, and most jewelers will give you an exact-value trade if you agree to spend 20 percent more on the second ring. Or, if cupid is dead in your heart forever, you can drown your sorrows in $10,000 worth of trade-value gold chains. Affleck would be proud.

HOW TO

DINO MIGHT

KILL A T.REX

Paleontologists recently discovered preserved T. rex soft tissue. So after we clone the beasts, we must fight them.

1 KNOW YOUR PREY

First of all, don't panic. The T. rex was primarily a scavenger and preferred dead meat over your live flesh, says paleontologist Dr. John "Jack" Horner, a T. rex expert and technical adviser for Jurassic Park and The Lost World. The six-ton beast could move anywhere from 15 to 40 mph but was likely clumsy on his feet, so your best bet is tripping him up. Researchers believe a high-speed fall could crack his skull, crush his organs, and break his neck—or at least be painful enough to really, really piss him off.

2 SET THE TRAP

The king of lizards was 18 feet tall, so string twisted nylon rope (used in boating for its supreme strength) across a road four feet off the ground and secure it to two stable objects. Now the bait: "The T. rex had olfactory lobes larger than any other dinosaur's, so it could smell at great distances," notes Horner, who's also a curator at Bozeman, Montana's Museum of the Rockies, which excavated the dino soft tissue. Throw a bucket of blood on a rotting corpse and place it several yards beyond the trap.

3 START THE CHASE

Now find a cloned T. rex and challenge the big fella to a boxing match. Your mockery of his embarrassingly short, scrawny arms will infuriate him, yet he'll be unable to grab you. Dodge his gnashing seven-inch teeth protruding from his four-foot-long mouth, then hop into your Geo Metro and lead him on a mid-speed chase toward your tripwire. With any luck, he'll turn his attention toward your lifeless bait, lunge for it, and pull a nasty Gerald Ford. Presto! T. rex boots for everybody!

BEG, BORROW, AND STEER

Joining a car club can get you into the car of your dreams. But what can the car of your dreams get you?

Sad fact is, most guys will never know the joy of tearing down a twisty mountain road in something small, fast, and Italian, nor that of showing up at a big-bucks restaurant in a chromed-out British barge that gives the valet a hard-on.

But a few filthy rich car enthusiasts with means far beyond those of the common schmo are trying to correct this gross inequality. Their answer: car clubs, which charge subscription fees for the chance to periodically tear up the streets in one of the classic rides from their fleet.

Smaller ones, like Club Sportiva in Cali, have been around for years, but recently a 10-year-old company from England called Classic Car Club set up shop in Manhattan. And with franchises set to open in Florida, New Jersey, Texas, and Georgia, they're spreading the gospel of automotive time-shares far and wide.

The cost of admission isn't cheap—there's a one-time initiation fee of $1,500, and yearly dues of $7,000—but that kind of relatively modest lucre currently buys access to 30 of the finest examples of automotive engineering this side of Jay Leno's garage, with 20 more due in the club's stable by year's end.

Peek into their clubhouse and you'll find a '77 Aston Martin V-8 sitting next to a '69 Camaro SS/RS. Down the line is that '68 Lincoln Continental you always dreamed of rolling in. All told, there's nearly $1.5 million worth of grease-monkey art packed into their 10,000-square-foot space. Except this art wants to get dirty.

How does it all work? The club covers insurance and maintenance; members just keep the premium gas flowing. How often members can borrow the club's cars is based on a points system that's more complicated than a Lamborghini engine, but that seven large is worth about 40 driving days a year. Not too shabby, considering a weekend Ferrari rental in Vegas costs upward of $3,000 and lets you drive roughly as far as the local 7-Eleven.

Being the hard-hitting journalists we are, we sent out assistant editor Jon Wilde—a car nut who can barely afford a subway ride—to borrow some of the club's cars for three days worth of joyri...er, law-abiding test drives. Still, he beamed like a giddy schoolgirl when he was handed the keys to a 1980 Ferrari 308, a 1967 Chevy Chevelle SS, and a 1989 Rolls-Royce Corniche II convertible.

Of course, each vehicle had its own personality, quirks, pros, and cons. And each one commanded attention and respect in its own way. But as Jon found out, a car that gets attention means a driver who gets attention. And that's where all the fun begins. ▶

"Ladies, have you ever felt real Italian velour?"

The Rolls Royce Corniche always looks best when there's lots of green around

Inside story: Wool carpets in front and back, swaths of hand-polished walnut, and a sea of creamy Connolly leather—these are the hallmarks of the finest in British automobiles.

Wilde's ride: First things first—I get Steve, a fellow editor, to drop the Corniche's top. Why not do it myself? As I see it, the best place to enjoy a Rolls is from the backseat. So I've enlisted Steve to man the helm of my bespoke British ship for the night. Besides, I've got more important concerns than maneuvering a 5,000-pound, 17-foot-long land yacht through Manhattan streets.

See, I'm sitting in the backseat... alone. That won't cut it if I'm going to roll up to PM, one of the city's hottest nightclubs, in a car that cost $205,500 when new.

Just as I give Steve the nod to pull anchor, a leggy blonde walking by admires the Royce.

"Hot car," she says, looking up.

"It's better on the inside," I reply. "Care to see for yourself?" A quick punch to the shoulder and Steve opens the door for her. Turns out she's got other plans for the evening, but I graciously offer a ride to where she's going. When we arrive, she takes one last look at the Rolls and says, "I would definitely fuck on the hood of this car."

Damn. No time to dwell on lost causes, though, as I spy two young women out of my league—and my budget—eyeing the car.

"Any chance you ladies care to join me?" I ask as Steve stops in front of them. The brunette whispers to her blonde friend before they both pile in. When I ask the brunette if she would have jumped in had I not been in a Rolls, she doesn't mince words.

"Nope."

The painful realization that beautiful women really are suckers for big money—a nagging fear of average joes like me everywhere—will set in tomorrow. But for tonight, as I roll up to the club and step out of the Rolls with a woman on each arm, I don't much care.

VINTAGE: 1967 Chevrolet Chevelle SS

ENGINE: 396-cubic-inch, 325 bhp V-8

0-60: 6.5 seconds TOP SPEED: 130 mph

Inside story: In 1964 Pontiac invented the muscle car with the GTO option on its midsize Le Mans coupe. Chevy answered by beefing up its '64 Chevelle's SS with a 300-horsepower 327-cubic-inch mill.

Wilde's ride: I twist the key, and the 396 up front shakes and snorts so much that it feels like I've been shoved into a cage with a pissed-off bull. So I drop the beast into drive, pull out, and take in the sweet music of the rumbling big block.

That's when things get weird. A guy in a Kia eyes the SS, then nods in approval. Men on the

"So you don't know where the nearest Waffle House is, I take it?"

sidewalk turn a stoplight into story hour about the Olds Cutlass 442 or Boss Mustang they once had. People yell, "Nice car!"... without tacking "asshole!" onto the end. This feels good.

I arrive at the Berlin Turnpike (Route 15) in Connecticut, where summer Saturday nights mean the four-lane strip is lousy with street-racing kids in hopped-up imports. But the young guns won't play when I let the Chevelle grunt out a dare.

Finally, I get a taker. A rev from either side, then the green light. The pedal hits the floor.

The Chevelle's rear tires spin, then grab the asphalt and rip the car forward. The 396 roars, and I think maybe this wasn't such a good idea.

I was right. I got hammered. In a parking lot down the road, I learn my competition was a Toyota Supra turbo with 550 horses. "Sweet ride, though," says the young owner, eyeing the deep blue SS. "Sounds badass."

I'll take that. Old-school muscle may not match new-school hustle, but it still demands respect. At the end of the day, when you're driving a stud like this, that's all that matters.

SPEC CHECK

VINTAGE: 1980 Ferrari 308 GTSi

ENGINE: 3.0-liter, 205 bhp V-8

0-60: 7.9 seconds TOP SPEED: 147 mph

Inside story: Recognize the silhouette and Rosso Corsa red? The 308 was Magnum's ride. More importantly, the 308, with its rear-mounted V-8 and "entry level" pricing, is the paterfamilias to a lineage that includes the Ferrari's latest racer, the F430.

Wilde's ride: A quick look at the specs and it turns out this two-seater from Modena isn't quite the asphalt terror of its more modern brethren. Hell, a new Nissan Maxima cranks out 60 more horses. Blame the "i" in "GTSi." New U.S.

emissions regulations in 1980 forced Ferrari to swap out carburetors for a set of fuel injectors that choked 35 horsepower from the mill.

Still, this ain't no family sedan. The seating position is just above go-cart level, and the fabled Ferrari gated shifter gleams. Twist the key and the V-8 purrs to life behind your head. Stab the pedal and the high-revving mill lets out a ferocious howl. The sound is addictive.

But the best part? Everyone knows it's a Ferrari. That's what this car is all about, at least now that it's 25 years old. My drive to the Hamptons is filled with the jealous looks of minivan-piloting soccer dads who turn away so I don't catch their admiring glances. Too late.

At Cyril's, a roadside watering hole at the point of Long Island, I park next to the yuppie-filled crowd spilling out into the parking lot. A few spots down are a new Ferrari 575M Maranello and a Viper. The 308 fits in well.

That's when I realize it fits in too well. The car is old news here. I want more jealous stares, not moneyed indifference. Seems the only thing more addictive than the scream of the 308 is the gawking audience that comes with driving one.

On the way out I gun the engine, giving the crowd a moment to pinpoint the wailing V-8 just before I tear off in a tail-wagging, gravel-spitting streak of red. I feel much better. M

THE MAN WITH THE $100,000 BREASTS

Close your eyes and try to remember the widest

When Brian Zembic first shows me his money if he lasted a year with the globes intact.

All he had to do was pay for the surgery itself.

So he did. To everyone's astonishment, he forked out a few grand for a pair of C-cups. That was in 1997. Eight years ago. When Titanic came out. Yet today he's still got the tits.

"You know why? Because I can't afford to have the damn things taken out!" He's grinning.
"No, seriously, it's because I hate operations. That general anesthetic, it makes me so sick. And now I've had them in so long, there's all this scar tissue underneath..."

Zembic drops his head in a rare moment of contemplation.

"You know what? I can't even remember what it's like not having them. Is it really eight years? Shit. That's nearly a fifth of my life. That's a long time to have boobs."

Brian Zembic is a unique and exceptional man—not so much because he's got hooters, but because, on him, they seem almost incidental. He's loud and manic, the center of attention. He's a brilliant sleight-of-hand magician, constantly whipping out a deck of cards. He's a Ping-Pong coach and world-class blackjack and backgammon player. Gambling has paid for everything he owns, including a beautiful four-bedroom home in Las Vegas with a yellow Hummer parked out front.

But his pals don't call him the Wiz simply for his gambling and magic skills. The man with the mammaries also has an uncanny ability to get hot women giggling their way into the sack.

"It's unbelievable," says his friend Derek, a professional blackjack player. "It's not as though he's good-looking. But he gets away with murder. He gets them laughing, pulls a few cards out of their cleavage, and next thing you know he's cupping their tits and they're away."

Zembic was always a tit man. "I was breastfed until the age of six," he kids. Having his own pair has done nothing to dilute his fetish. "I still live for nice breasts, even though my own don't do anything for me," he says. "That was my big worry about getting the implants: How the hell am I going to get some chi-chi? But, you know, I'm shocked—there's never been a girl who hasn't enjoyed them. The boobs help. Now if I think I have no shot with a girl, I use the boobs.
If I had them removed, I'd be like, 'Jesus Christ, how am I going to get a date now?'"

At first glance (long, disbelieving stare is more like it), it's tough to imagine the breasts are such a chick magnet. They're

MAN AT HIS BEST

BREAST YEARS OF HIS LIFE

In 1998 Maxim introduced Brian Zembic, the man who cashed in on a $100,000 dare by getting breast implants for a year. So, eight years later, how come he's still got 'em?

When Brian Zembic first shows me his tits, we're in his bedroom. Door closed. Curtains drawn. Lights off.
Pitch black. Then he flicks a switch, and suddenly a pair of glowing pink orbs appear, hovering weirdly in the darkness.

"Look at these fucking things!" yells Zembic, who's standing there topless, holding two flashlights beneath his breasts and looking down at the spectacle. "Don't they look alien?"

They do. Eerily translucent and slightly hairy.
They look like they might hatch. "Before I got them, I had no idea they glowed like this," he continues. "Apparently, it doesn't work with silicone. Only saline."

Zembic, 44, has every reason to marvel at his tits. They have, after all, made him a legend. As constant companions, they entered his life when he and his friends—a motley rabble of wealthy Vegas gamblers who bet on pretty much anything—were discussing how nuts it was that their friend Martha, and for that matter women in general, went under the knife for a bigger rack. Were breasts really that important?

"I said, 'Fuck, yeah! The only reason Martha gets attention is because she has boobs,'" recalls Zembic. "And if I had them, I'd get just as much attention. Even more. Because the whole world revolves around boobs."

So one of his pals, a high-stakes backgammon player, issued a put-your-money-where-your-mouth-is challenge. He said he'd give Zembic $100,000 if he got breast implants.
At first Zembic hedged, but eventually a meeting was called—a "titty tribunal"—and the terms were set. Zembic would get the hair, for starters. "I shave them when I have a date," Zembic says. "I'm a gentleman like that." So what's the chick appeal? The curiosity factor? Or the fact that he's a minor celebrity with a book—The Man With the $100,000 Breasts and Other Gambling Stories—named after his startling appendages? "A lot of things contribute," he explains. "But I think it's also because they're all lesbians. I'm serious. They play around with them, they suck them, they rub theirs on mine. And they get to do all that without feeling like they're lesbians."

Does it feel good to have women sucking your tits?

"Not really, but I never had any feeling there before," he says. "I just fake it to keep it going. It's a turn-on for me to watch two girls. So when I'm with a girl, I pretend it's not me and I'm on the outside, watching two lesbians going at it."

In addition to fame and pseudo-lesbo action, Zembic's jugs have brought him a small fortune. After the book came out, he appeared on The Man Show, The Howard Stern Radio Show, and Inside Edition, among others. He posed for both The Star newspaper and Helmut Newton. Then there were all the side bets. For example, a high-rolling pal gave him $2,000 to flash his tits in the middle of a casino. So far, he estimates, his snobs have earned him about $270,000.

But it hasn't all been cash and chicks. As any well-endowed woman will tell you, having a mondo rack has its disadvantages. To keep his gazongas hidden in public, Zembic has to dress a certain way—not in cleavage-enhancing bras, but spandex tops and billowy shirts. His outfits are odd—think hospital orderly—but he and PVC garden hose. And he wouldn't look as hot.

'Girls get to suck them and play around with them without feeling like they're lesbians.'

insists that's not out of embarrassment. Pens in his shirt pocket chafe, and jogging's painful without a sports bra. As for swimming or getting a tan, he hasn't done either in eight years. And airport security is always treacherous.

"It's embarrassing when they start pronging you right in front of everyone," he says. "Once they back-roomed me. They looked at me like they thought I had a bomb. Luckily, I had the book with me, which explains everything. So now I always gotta pack that book when I fly."

But these are minor irritations. In general, the boobs appear to have treated him well. Ironically, they've even kept him in shape. "I can't put on weight, because then my boobs look like shit," he says. "I want my boobs to look good, even if I'm the only one who sees them! Now I know why girls are always dieting. It's for their boobs. I'm serious. I've got an insight into women now. Girls can relate to me, too. They talk to me the way they talk to gay guys. The only difference is, afterward, I try to bang 'em."

The only time he feared his breasts might seriously backfire was with his ex-wife, the mother of his five-year-old daughter, Mika. When they were first dating, even having sex, he managed to keep them secret from her. "I thought she would freak out," he says. "So I just kept pushing her away if she tried to touch me there. When I eventually told her [by handing her the book], she just cried. She was worried her parents wouldn't accept me because they were traditional Chinese. But after an hour, she was over it and we were in the sack. We got married about six months afterward."

Zembic's in-laws eventually found out about his sweater meat through a TV show. "It was one of those 'Will the real Brian Zembic stand up?' things," he says. "But even her parents accepted me in the end." The reason he split from his wife wasn't implant-related. He says it was because "she wanted to go

MONEY MATTERS

BRIAN'S BIZARRE BETS

Whether making bets or taking them, Zembic has a history of cashing in.

Hand Maiden

"On a flight I bet a buddy $2,000 I could get a stranger to give me a hand job. I picked out a girl and approached her. When the movie comes on, my buddy looks over and sees a towel over me and her hand working away on me."

Panty Run

"For $3,000 I ran a mile through the streets of Philly in only panties and a bra. If I got stopped by the cops and didn't finish, I'd lose the $3,000, so I practiced the safest route all week. The cops didn't bother me though."

Marathon Man

"I bet poker champ Gus Hansen $10K he couldn't beat the marathon record over 26 days. He had to run 16 100-meter dashes a day, at like, 16 seconds each. Gus is an athlete, but after a day he decided it was too hard and settled for $3K."

Beer Frisbee

"How long do you think it takes to drink a professional Frisbee full of beer? People say, like, one or two minutes. So I bet them they can't do it in 15 minutes. Try it. You can't do it. You can fit about five cans of beer in there."

Toilet Bowl

"Someone bet me $14,000 I couldn't live in a bathroom for a month. The guy I bet had his buddies take horrible craps in the place. After six days they gave me $7,000 to stop the bet. No one thought I'd last that long."

MAN MADE

Get beyond the breasts. This bionic man can be built today.

Eyes

The "Dobelle Eye" uses a sub-miniature camera to signal electrodes on the visual cortex. The dot-matrix views of Pam Anderson's rack aren't perfect, but they're no more artificial.

Heart

The titanium and polyurethane AbioCor replacement heart—first installed in 2001—withstands 100,000 beats a day, assuring a longer life than a pizza-eating machine like you deserves to have.

Shoulder

Your Little League coach was right. That weak-ass curve ball didn't get you to the majors; it just fucked up your arm. The pain stops with a cobalt/chromium-alloy ball in a plastic socket.

Foot

Endolite's first ever all-terrain dog comes with an e-carbon shock-absorbing heel, independent heel and toe springs, and split toe for navigating bumps. Almost makes losing a foot seem cool.

Hip

Hip replacement is funny! That is, until you tumble down some stairs and smash yours. Durable ceramic-on-metal joints help you walk, and feel better about getting screwed out of Social Security.

Brain

A skull-implanted chip, BrainGate has 100 electrodes that are linked to a computer, allowing owners to check e-mail or switch from ESPN to ESPN2 just by thinking about it.

Arm/Hand

Thanks to myoelectric systems, you can use an ErgoArm Elbow and SensorHand Speed from Germany's Otto Bock HealthCare to unsnap any bra hook...or just rip it off with the patented AutoGrasp feature.

Knee

Sensors in Rheo Knee's lower leg apparatus give feedback 1,000 times a second, allowing your hinge to react to any surface and giving you the last laugh on kneecap-smashing loan sharks.

gambling, and I wanted to stay home with Mika." And, yes, little Mika knows all about Daddy's hooters.

Perhaps most surprisingly, having breasts seems to have settled Zembic down. One might even suggest they've imparted a nesting instinct. Before the operation, Zembic frequently traveled across the country and Europe, outsmarting casinos at blackjack tables and nearly killing himself in a motorcycle crash in Spain. But since the breasts were installed, he's become a stay-at-home dad who lounges about, playing online poker and coaching Ping-Pong. For a few grand, he'll do the occasional magic show.

"I've got my savings," says the ultimate Mr. Mom. "And I don't want to risk that now that I've got Mika."

Besides, the biggest payday may be on the horizon. There's been talk of a Boob Man movie or six years now. The script's finished and various actors have expressed interest, including David Duchovny, who joked that, to impress the Academy, he'd actually get implants for the part.

"I was done after a year, I wanted them out," Zembic says. "But then every year when they renewed the rights, they kept saying, 'Keep the tits so you can appear at the end of the movie. It'll be really cool.'"

David Higgins, the producer, laughs. "I'm not insisting that he keep his implants in; it's completely up to him," he says. "It would be great for marketing, of course, but we can always find another way."

The simple truth is that Zembic is attached to his tits.

"If I ever looked in the mirror and thought, What the fuck am I doing with these?, then I'd get them out," he says. "But I've got to say, I like them. They're mine, they're me. What can I say?"

Nevertheless, the clock is ticking on the most famous knockers in gambling history. He recently accepted a bet from pal Michael Sall, a high-stakes gin player, that throws the future of his chest into question. Zembic groans just thinking about it. "I get $50,000 if I go to a D-cup, or $10,000 if I take them out. But I have to pay $20,000 if I leave them in." He looks pained. "I've got till February..."

Q Mustaches are all the rage, and I want to grow one. Should I base my look on Rollie Fingers or Little Richard?

Lee Huff, Dayton, OH

A Well, I can't tell you not to copy, because I copied Little Richard when I grew my mustache. I don't know who Rollie Fingers is. [Ed. note: We tell him] I'm a sports bigot... my advice is never imitate sports figures. And don't imitate my mustache or I'll have you killed.

Q I feel bad that I don't ever do anything good with my time. What's something I can do that will make me feel better about myself?

Gary N., Buffalo, NY

A Stay home and wear industrial-size Kleenex boxes on your feet as shoes and stomp around your home all day long. Howard Hughes supposedly did this and it made him feel better. Who am I to say it doesn't work? I've tried it in my own house and it always puts me in a better mood.

Q Is cologne ever a good idea?

Sam Spencer, Jacksonville, FL

A No. Not unless you have leprosy or jungle rot. Or some inner fungus that is resistant to cleaning.

Q I want to date this WASPy chick at work, but I'm worried she's out of my blue-collar league. How should I approach her?

ellobo, via e-mail

A All WASPs want to fuck blue-collar people. Play it up. Say, "I seen" instead of "I saw." Put a broken refrigerator on your lawn. I guarantee you, you'll get laid.

Q I sometimes go and get manicures with my girlfriend. Should I be questioning my masculinity?

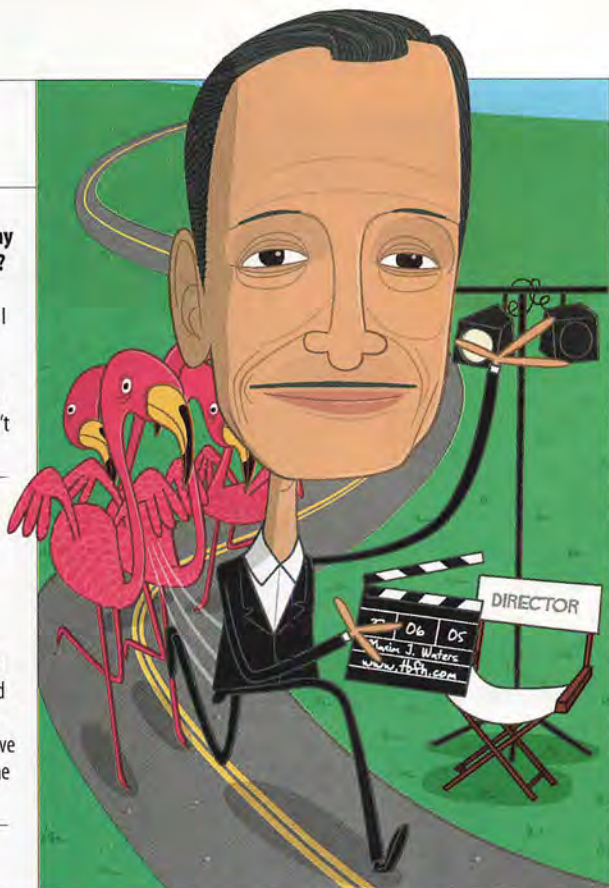

BB, Greenwich, CT

A Yes! I'm gay and even I'm turned off by you. No matter what your sexual preference or gender, no one likes a man who is fussy about his looks. You can spend as much time as you want looking good. But don't do it in public.

Q When I was in college, my mom had me arrested for stealing her car. Now I hardly ever see my family, and I miss them. Is there a good way to patch things up?

Tom, South Bend, IN

A Well, you could buy her a car if you have enough money. Or steal her car again, right after the warranty expires, and wreck it. Do you like her? Have her arrested. See how she likes it!

THE PRINCE OF PUKE

JOHN WATERS

The director of Pink Flamingos, Pecker, and A Dirty Shame (out now on DVD) wraps his twisted mind around your most vulgar questions.

'My advice is never imitate sports figures. And don't imitate my mustache or I'll have you killed.'

Q Are bow ties totally out of fashion, or is there any way to wear one and look cool?

Milton D., New York, NY

A I have to suppress my bow tie-bashing reflex daily. Stop me. Before I kill again. No one looks good in a bow tie.

Q My girlfriend thought it would be sexy to show me what she can do with veggies and other edibles. Now I can hardly have sex with her, much less eat squash. What can I do to get this image out of my head?

Larry D., Shreveport, LA

A Embrace the image. It's called splashing. Splashing is an English fetish, and it's the erotic urge to dump food in your loved one's crotch. Don't laugh! Everybody needs a new fetish for the autumn of their years. Save it. Look forward to it.

Q I have a lot of back pain, but I hear chiropractors are quacks. Any suggestions for how to alleviate the pain?

Jimmy Butler, Portland, ME

A Poppers sometimes work. That's a sex drug you take. You sniff things.

Q I'm sick of working for the man, and I want to open a gourmet pickle shop. Do you think that's a good idea?

Darren W., Los Angeles, CA

A I do because I'd be a customer. I love pickles—especially sweet, midget gherkins. They're my favorite. I have six of them every day for lunch. Open up your shop and I'll be the first in line.

Q I got a gig teaching convicted murderers at a prison. I always feel intimidated. How can I assert myself with these hardcore inmates?

P. McCluskey, Staten Island, NY

A They smell fear, and they will kill you. But when I taught in jail, I never got intimidated. In fact, I wanted to move in! I was more scared of the guards.

Q What's a good way to impress a first date without going overboard?

Craig H., Cleveland, OH

A Make them laugh. Make them feel smart. And commit a tiny crime together.

Q My buddy got a sex change, and now I don't know how to include him/her on what used to be guy nights. What should I do?

longhorn83, via e-mail

A Tell him to come in drag as a man. Drag kings are much cooler than drag queens these days. And besides, most men who get a sex change into women become lesbians at first. Won't that be hot? All straight men seem to think they can give lesbians what they think they really need, which in reality is the exact opposite of what they really need.

Q Is there a surefire system I can use when I bet on horses?

Reid Eliot, Bennington, VT

A Gambling seems to me to be for losers. You never can win. I never bet on the horses—the racetracks are so shabby!

Q My friend called me a whore because I hooked up with two guys in the same night. I slept with one guy, but on the other date I didn't go further than oral sex. Am I a whore?

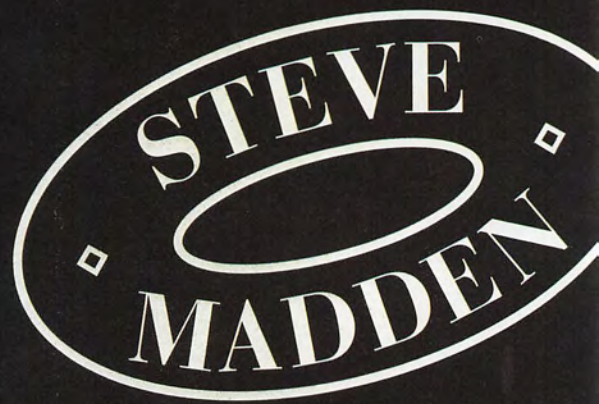

Brooke, Houston, TX

A Yes.

CRUNCH TIME

What's up, chum? At long last a Jaws game that lets you feast on fatsos in water wings.

It's been 30 years since Roy Scheider blew up Amity Island's first great white and 18 since Mario Van Peebles blew chum all over Jaws: The Revenge. But that hasn't stopped Majesco from trolling in their film-to-game adaptation in 2005, just in time for limbless surfers everywhere to hop for joy—because this time you get to be the frickin' shark. (And not just any shark: an ecoterrorist shark!) Modern-day Amity Island has been changed by the Environplus corporation, but you make sure to swing on by, eating schools of fish...and the CEO's son. (Whoops, your bad!) The suits send in shark-hunting mercenary Cruz Ruddock and Michael Brody, a marine biologist out to put you back in SeaWorld. While on the lam, you get to enjoy the dinner buffet, dismembering men, women, and children, and leaving a trail of gore through the beautiful 3-D ocean environments. (These look particularly sweet, created by the same folks who brought you those Ecco the Dolphin games.) Leap into the air and drag poor bastards off their boats or toss oil canisters into rigs and blow shit up, like Rambo with five rows of teeth.

THE 40-YEAR-OLD VIRGIN

No, it's not a Bill Gates biopic—it's about Steve Carell finally gettin' some!

Out: August 19 Director: Judd Apatow Stars: Steve Carell, Paul Rudd, Catherine Keener

The story: Andy Stitzer (Carell) is the kind of guy who couldn't get laid in a warehouse wearing elastic waistband pants with $1,400 in cash superglued to his forehead. Luckily, his coworkers at an electronics superstore help him get his chest waxed and hide his never-ending treasure trove of collectible toys long enough to fail over and over again.

The buzz: Meet Judd Apatow. He gets to hang out with Will Ferrell all the time, producing movies like Anchorman and The Cable Guy, and TV shows like Freaky and Geeks and The Ben Stiller Show. And now, after all that success, he gets to direct his first film, which will make you wet your pants like a three-year-old drinking ice coffee. With Apatow about to produce Ferrell's next really funny film, the NASCAR-themed Talladega Nights, it's about time you learned his name.

We're guessing: ★★★★★

"Even worse, my right hand's a lesbian."

Out: August 12 Director: John Dahl

Stars: Benjamin Bratt, James Franco

The story: The Great Raid is the amazing story of the most daring POW rescue mission in American history—amazing because it's hard to believe there's a story about WWII that hasn't been told yet. (The war even has its own cable network: The History Channel.) Based on a true story, the movie focuses on the effort to free 500 captured American soldiers from the brutal Japanese death camp at Cabanatuan in the Philippines. Filled with more patriotism and blood than a Super Bowl sideline, you'll be reminded, once again, why America rules.

The buzz: The Great Raid was a veritable POW itself, languishing on the shelf after more than a year of re-editing, caught in the crossfire of a messy studio turf war between Miramax and Disney. It figures—that Pluto always looked like a pinkie commie bastard.

HAVE YOU SEEN THIS GIRL?

Real name:

The best-looking punching bag in Hollywood.

Her story: Born in Jersey and raised in Texas, it's no surprise this Polish stunt babe has no problem playin' with the boys. "It was always a challenge growing up," she admits, "but boys learned pretty quickly that I can hold my own. One time this jackass in Mexico punched a guy friend of mine with brass knuckles. So I grabbed him and threw him up against the wall and hit him in the face." With more than a decade of stunt experience under her belt, Nina has parlayed her love of bruising into a successful career, having performed stunts in movies like The Rundown and July's sci-fi thriller The Island. Despite being a legit badass, Nina insists she's not that intimidating. "I'm a total goof! My nickname in high school was Goofy." We never thought of goofy as hot before, but...

TONY YAYO

Thoughts of a Predicate Felon (G-Unit/Interscope)

With a stage name that's about as subtle as Al Pacino's acting ("Joey Crystal Meth" must have been taken), it's only fitting that Tony Yayo's debut record is harder than a prison pork chop. After spending the last year and a half locked up on a variety of charges (including gun possession), Yayo is the lost G-Unit member, missing out on 50 Cent's remarkable run to platinum status. But now that Yayo's a free man, he's all business, releasing a bangin' new single, "So Seductive," on an album packed with so many gritty street raps, you'll be picking gravel out of your headphones.

BLACK REBEL MOTORCYCLE CLUB

Howl (RCA)

Well on their way to becoming that super-hip band everyone talks about but nobody really listens to, Black Rebel Motorcycle Club changed course. After two records of furious rock, album three feels like the morning after a five-alarm bender—never loud enough to cause nausea, filled with soothing acoustic guitars and mellow blues riffs. Yep, this is what happens when you spend more energy crafting songs than picking out matching leather jackets.

DIAMOND NIGHTS

Popsicle (Kemado)

These guys may sound like they're clowning on that 1970s classic rock your stepdad plays in his IROC-Z, but make no mistake—Diamond Nights have the Thin Lizzy concert tees and Black Sabbath iron-on patches to prove they're not kidding around. With riffs reminiscent of Van Halen, a swagger that's pure Billy Idol, and a wicked raunchy sense of humor all their own, their debut actually makes this stuff sound better than it did the first time around.

SWITCHFOOT

Nothing Is Sound (Columbia)

After hearing their New Agey power ballad "Meant to Live" swell from the radio for the 56,877,103rd time, we weren't exactly stoked for a fifth album from these well-meaning Christian-rock surfer boys. But y'know what? This isn't too terrible. This time Switchfoot comes off less like a mediocre grunge band trying to be U2 and more like a mediocre grunge band trying to be Coldplay. So instead of wishing you were deaf in both ears, you'll only want to be deaf in one.

STELLA-STARR*

Harmonies for the Haunted (RCA)

The New Wave revival may be getting old, but don't unpop that collar until you check out the second album from stellastarr*, which wallows in the stylish mope-pop that the Cure and Joy Division pioneered. Sure, cynics may note that stellastarr*'s little more than a Cliff's Notes version of those bands, but their new songs burst with the kind of pained hooks you could hang a John Hughes movie on. Even better—no lame-ass disco beats!

THAT'LL
LEAVE A MARK!

> DON'T LOOK BACK IN ANGER

TEN YEARS LATER

With an expanded DVD in stores, Tommy Boy director Peter Segal looks back on the movie he hated so much he tried to quit.

PETER SEGAL AT A GLANCE:

- 2005 The Longest Yard
- 2004 50 First Dates
- 2003 Anger Management
- 2000 Nutty Professor II: The Klumps
- 1996 My Fellow Americans
- 1995 Tommy Boy
- 1994 Naked Gun 33 1/3: The Final Insult

What does it feel like to look back at the movie after a decade?

I never thought this movie would become so popular—I thought it was the worst thing in the world. My editor would keep calling me saying, "That stuff is great! This is gold!" But I thought he was patronizing me. I even grew a beard because I wanted to hide from it.

Critics thought Tommy Boy was the worst thing in the world, too.

Yeah, they hated it. Unanimously. One of my favorite reviews called it "an insult to humanity." Ironically, over the years, it's become my best-reviewed movie, but it took 10 years to get there.

When did you come across Tommy Boy?

After Naked Gun 33 1/3, I read this script called

"Billy the Third: A Midwestern," which was the movie's original title. I wanted to work with Chris Farley so badly I was blind to the fact that the script really wasn't complete. We kept only about 15 of the original pages.

How was "Billy the Third" different from Tommy Boy?

It was about Chris Farley finding his lost soul mate in his new brother, Rob Lowe. But I wanted to tell a story about two reluctant heroes saving this town. I actually tried quitting the movie before we started because I didn't think it was going to come together.

How did it come together?

We had 66 pages and I would write scenes every night for the next day's shoot.

Was a lot of it ad-libbed?

We were winging it. Chris did this "fat guy in a little coat" routine at the Saturday Night Live offices, but it wasn't a song. In the original version of that scene, the camera was on David Spade's character—you can see it on the DVD—but I didn't like it. So we tried it again, and this time Chris sang it. Bits and pieces like that would come up on the fly every day.

Were Chris Farley and David Spade really like their characters?

The nice thing about this DVD is the footage between scenes. Chris would always look for David's approval, so one time he asked, "Does this suit make me look fat?" And David said,

"No, your face does." I knew we had to put that in the movie, but they said, "No, it was just a joke." A lot of the movie was just those guys talking to each other.

What was the set like?

Chris had no problem taking off his clothes. Between takes he would walk around and talk to the crew buck naked as if nothing was out of the ordinary. No one could keep a straight face.

How did you feel when Chris died?

I was shocked. Chris was clean during the filming of Tommy Boy. Every time I see David, it feels like something's missing.

"Then Billy Joel appeared..."

The telemarketers have started calling during breakfast instead of dinner, your bratty kids would rather play with chemicals than go to sleep, and your wife sounds like Sgt. But you don't care, because you're the Incredible Hulk, destroying a digital universe into teeny little pixels, sprinting up the walls, leaping between skyscrapers, and throwing buses around. Who needs caller ID, Sominex, and divorce papers when you can smash? And that's what this game is about. The more stylishly you smash things (rip a car in half and use it as brass knuckles, for example), the more points you'll earn to beef up your bruiser with special abilities, like sonic thunder pounds. If you can somehow block out Mortal Kombat's earlier attempts at spin-offs—namely, Mortal Kombat Mythologies, which was about as well received as a barbed wire colonoscopy—you'll find that this artery-emptying 3-D adventure returns the franchise to classic fighting form. You play as karate kid Liu Kang or Kung Lao, roaming around the spiked pits and stinking dungeons of Outworld, trying to save Earth from that crusty old Shang Tsung. The creators get points for keeping the combos, juggles, air attacks, and instant-kill fatalities, not to mention the chopsoy feel and cameos from familiar faces like Baraka and Reptile. # ARRRR YOU READY?

In their new book, Pirattitude, John "Ol' Chumbucket" Baur and Mark "Cap'n Slappy" Summers teach wannabe buccaneers how to swig, swagger, and speak like pillagers.

What exactly is "pirattitude"?

Cap'n Slappy: It's a swagger. It's what makes you say you swashed your buckle. It's the thing that says "back off" to the landlubbers, and "come hither" to the wenches.

Chumbucket: Think back to when you were a teenager and you gave your mother a salty answer, and she'd say, "Don't give me that attitude." It's that, but with a pirate on top.

What spawned the fascination?

Cap'n Slappy: We were playing racquetball, and one of us sprained something and yelled, "Arrr!" Then we started saying things like, "Ye fired that one off me mizzenmast!"

Did that inspire you to scour your family trees for traces of legit pirate blood?

Chumbucket: No. We just made a bunch of prank phone calls. What you're talking about sounds like too much work.

Can we also attribute National Talk Like a Pirate Day to the racquetball mishap?

Cap'n Slappy: Kind of. The racquetball injury happened on June 6, which is D-day. We couldn't sully D-day with something as trivial as Talk Like a Pirate Day. So I said, "I've got my ex-wife's birthday, September 19, in my head, and I'm not doing anything with it..."

So does pirattitude translate well with the ladie...er...wenches?

Chumbucket: When you walk up to a wench and say, "Prepare to be boarded" or "Can I put my monkey pump in your bunglehole?" or "I'd like to drop anchor in your lagoon," you need the swagger to back it up. Shy British people saying "I'd like to fire me cannon through your porthole" just doesn't work.

What kind of drink would make her think you're a true pirate?

Cap'n Slappy: Rum. Straight rum. Chumbucket: In a dirty glass.

What are the key ingredients to a scurvy pirate name?

Cap'n Slappy: First you need a good modifier, like Mad, Slippery, or Saggy. Then you need a tough first name, like Patch or Dirk. And then you add on an amusing last name, like Chamberpot.

Saggy Dirk Chamberpot it is! Didn't real pirate names sound tougher?

Cap'n Slappy: My favorite pirate is Blackbeard. He was a madman. He used to light wicks in his beard before going into battle to give him that extra pirattitude. He was like the Donald Trump of pirates.

Do modern-day pirates exist?

Cap'n Slappy: When I think of modern-day pirate ships, I think of those huge SUVs with a crew stuffed inside and hanging out the windows. And in South Central, they have drive-bys, which is sort of like firing cannons.

Who's the fiercest modern pirate?

Cap'n Slappy: Who's that Australian guy that's always getting into fights? Russell Crowe! He's got pirattitude—he's unbalanced!

Anyone who just screams "Landlubber"?

Chumbucket: I've always been a big fan of Bob Newhart, but there's something about him that just doesn't scream pirate.

Cap'n Slappy: I'm thinking Frasier's brother, David Hyde Pierce.

Is David Hasselhoff a pirate?

Cap'n Slappy: In Germany, pirate. Everywhere else, not.

What about K.I.T.T.?

Chumbucket: Definitely pirate.

Is there any modern-day equivalent to walking the plank?

Chumbucket: Getting married.

What does the future hold for pirates?

Chumbucket: There's no bottom to this, because it's so fun and inappropriate to swagger and snarl like a pirate. You don't get to do that much in your life, and it's fun to play someone who is so obviously bad. Everybody gets off on playing a pirate. Plus, the wenches seem to enjoy it, too.

MEAT: CAN'T BEAT IT!

More than half a million Americans are diagnosed with heart failure every year. Read this and join the party!

> BESSIE

1. ROUND

Ass meat. Because cows have strong legs for kicking in farmer's skulls, their rears are as muscly as J.Lo's. So cook it low and slow, with a lot of moist heat, and marinate the hell out of it beforehand. London broil is from the round section, as are the thin steaks you eat for breakfast.

2. LOIN

Divided into the loin and sirloin, this area makes up the cow's "sorority girl tattoo area" and has the most expensive cuts of beef. If you cook the loin anywhere beyond medium rare, you're a chump. Cuts from this area are the T-bone, porterhouse, sirloin steak, and filet mignon.

3. BREAST AND FLANK

Lean meat from the belly. It can have a lot of flavor, but overcook it and it'll turn into paving material. This is home to the brisket and corned beef, which is delicious with a side of guilt from your Irish mom who hasn't heard from you in weeks, ya ungrateful bastid.

4. RIB

Tender, with just enough delicious fat, or "marbling," for flavor. Since these cuts baste themselves, don't marinate before broiling or roasting them. Choice Delmonico steaks—which take their name from a famous New York City restaurant—come from the rib section.

5. CHUCK

From the shoulder, this is a cheap and juicy piece of meat (like your mom), but it can be tough and fatty (also like your mom) if you don't cook it properly. It makes great cube meat for stews, ground chuck for burgers and meat loaf, or hearty Yankee pot roast.

> INMATE NO. 2343597

1. WING

Made up of the tip, the wingette, and the drumette. While not nearly as sexy as the breast and leg, there's good eatin' here.

2. LEG

This is made up of the thigh and the drumstick, and it's perfect for frying. The leg is all dark meat, and juicy as hell.

3. BREAST

This is white meat only. Like Idaho. And the top part, called the tenderloin, is what they make chicken fillets from.

NUGGET

The nugget doesn't come from any specific part of the chicken's body. It's actually a delightful pastiche of gristle and sinew!

FAMOUS VEGETARIANS: Adolf Hitler, Moby, Ally Sheedy, Alec Baldwin, the B-52's, Corey Feldman, Fiona Apple, Richard Gere, Casey Kasem, Yoko Ono, Kirk Cameron

RATTLESNAKE

From: South-western United States
Tastes like: Chicken. No, really.
Upside: Versatile meat goes well with chili and beer.
Downside: Weakness, chills, and rotting of flesh near bite.

OSTRICH

From: South Africa, United States, Canada, Australia
Tastes like: Lean veal. Their gigantic eggs taste a lot like chicken eggs.
Upside: Less fat; ostrich steaks actually taste good.
Downside: Flightless, ugly.

BUFFALO

From: United States, Canada
Tastes like: A coarser, sweeter form of beef.
Upside: High in protein and low in cholesterol.
Downside: Embedded arrowheads chip teeth.

KANGAROO

From: Australia
Tastes like: Venison, a.k.a. Bambi, which tastes just like gamy beef.
Upside: Can be used in all kinds of barbecue dishes.
Downside: Horrified shrieks of Eeyore, Winnie, and Christopher Robin.

COOKING STYLES*HOT SMOKING

190 degrees for 10 hours

This is how you make jerky—by slowly cooking the meat of your choice (make sure it's extra lean!) at an extremely low temperature and pouring smoke into it for more flavor. The results are: (1) a chunk of meat that you can chew on for hours without any loss of structural integrity, and (2) colon cancer. But it's worth it!

BARBECUING

210 to 250 degrees for up to 24 hours

Slowly cooking at this temperature turns your meat into the most succulent food imaginable. Why? Because barbecuing renders the fat in the meat, allowing it to baste itself. And low temperature allows the heat to penetrate the center without crisping the outside to a charred husk. It doesn't get better than this.

ROASTING

250 to 350 for up to four hours

The time and temperature are higher, and so are the stakes! No, not really. We just wanted to say that. Slow-roasting gives some time to render the fats on the inside of your chunk of food, but the heat is intense enough to give a nice all-over tan to the dish. Every holiday meal should be cooked this way.

BROILING OR GRILLING

500 to 900 for up to 15 minutes

While roasting and barbecuing are long, slow culinary courtships, grilling is more like a quick hump in the back of a Tercel. Only instead of herpes and a beautiful, unplanned child you call "asshole," you get a nicely blackened dish with a tasty center. Grilled meats taste especially great when consumed in a stadium parking lot.

Special thanks to Ray Lampe, author of Dr. BBQ's Big-Time Barbecue Cookbook.

BABE*1. SHOULDER

You ever seen a pig's shoulders? They're fatty like a pork version of Mike Ditka. This cut is too tough to fry, but it goes down good if braised slowly. Pulled-pork BBQ sandwiches come from here. And we know how you like to pull pork.

2. LOIN

The loin provides the tenderest cuts and is divided into three parts—the blade, a fatty part up near the shoulder; the sirloin, which is close to the rump and bony as Karen Carpenter on crystal meth; and the middle loin, which is pricey but delicious.

3. BELLY

The gut contains the spareribs. The rest of the belly is usually cured and smoked to create the thing that men will kill and die for: bacon. Just say it: bacon. It doesn't matter when you're reading this...right now you could go for some bacon, couldn't you?

4. LEG

This is where the hams, the hocks, and the knuckles come from. The leg is a huge, meaty cut that typically makes up 24 percent of the hawk's total weight. Good cured and served with spicy brown mustard, it also makes a great roast.

A WORD ABOUT RIBS: We don't want to shock you, but back ribs and spareribs are two parts of the same damn rib. And "boneless ribs" aren't ribs at all—they're just extra loin muscle! Calling it a rib means more moo-lah for the butcher. And calling it "boneless loin" would kind of creep you out.

ASK US ANYTHING

Q Who would win a battle between Colonel Sanders and General Tso?

A Not even close. Harland Sanders made a tasty bird, but Tso would cut a swath through his franchises, leaving nothing behind but the charred bodies of workers in stupid hats. General Tso Tsungtang, born in 1812, was a merciless commander who crushed his enemies in the Nian Rebellion. By contrast, "Colonel" Sanders wore a white suit and fought in as many wars as George W. Bush.

Q Who invented the hot dog?

A The sausage goes back to ancient Babylon, but its mystery-meat cousin, the frankfurter, was invented in 1484, in Frankfurt-am-Main, Germany. The modern dog-on-a-bun was probably introduced in 1904 by Anton Feuchtwanger in St. Louis, and his meat rod evolved into today's beef-cartilage-sphincter dog that we now enjoy at major league ballparks every summer.

INVASION OF THE NEW FALL SHOWS

Once again the major networks will carpet-bomb prime time with dozens of new programs that will be off the air by next fall. Incoming!

BY ERIC GILLIN PHOTOGRAPHS BY DONALD MILLER

PICTURE PERSONALS

Why flip channels when we've already figured out which shows you'll love this year?

■ If you came up with a sitcom called All in the Family With Children while building a bong from duct tape and a Habitrail... you'll love Fox's The War at Home, a new sitcom featuring Michael Rapaport as an offensive dad.

■ If the only thing you wanted in the divorce was your collection of hardcover Tom Clancy books... check out NBC's E-Ring, starring Benjamin Bratt and Dennis Hopper as Pentagon pals saving the world one procedural move at a time.

■ If you always get suckered into watching The O.C. by your manipulative girlfriend, only to discover you kind of dig it... man up for Fox's Reunion, a new soap that airs right after The O.C. and features three bangin' hotties for you to gawk at.

■ If you ever worked in a five-star kitchen where the staff was crazier than the Oakland Raiders... you'll appreciate Fox's Kitchen Confidential, where a fingertip gets cut off, plated with a zesty sauce, and accidentally served to a food critic.

■ If you're TiVo-ing all three CSIs, when you're not watching all those Law & Orders... get ready for more procedural nonsense with Criminal Minds, Close to Home, Bones, The Gate, In Justice, The Evidence, The Unit, Just Legal...

■ If you put down the 10-sided die and wonder why there aren't any good shows about reporters who investigate supernatural goings-on with a hot female sidekick... ABC's The Night Stalker, a remake of the 1970s cult classic, is for you.

MY NAME IS EARL

The new TV math: White trash + lotto winner = comedic gold.

Airs: NBC, Tuesdays, 9 P.M.

Cast: Jason Lee, Ethan Suplee, Nadine Velazquez Take a fat husband, add an inexplicably hot wife, divide them by a bunch of bratty kids, and you get the main reason that today's half-hour comedies are staler than the air blowing between Roseanne Barr's legs. That's why you need to watch My Name Is Earl, NBC's new show about a dirtbag criminal named Earl (played by Lee) who wins the lottery, gets hit by a car, and realizes he needs to erase his karmic debt or else the rest of his life will be nothing more than empty packs of Winstons. So the dimwitted Earl sets out to right every wrong he's ever committed, eventually taking the boy he bullied as a child to a gay bar to pick up men. Sure, Earl's oddball Raising Arizona-with-a-dash-of-Arrested Development vibe may not attract giant audiences—but those people are too busy lamenting the coming end of Will & Grace.

WHAT IT'S ABOUT

There are approximately four things worth watching on this show, and they're all attached to Jennifer Love Hewitt and Aisha Tyler. Everything else, especially its Medium-meets-The Sixth Sense premise, is instantly forgettable.

SECOND CIRCLE OF HELL

Caught in a terrible storm where high winds whip your flesh.

SEX, LOVE & SECRETS

When the kids from The O.C. finally graduate high school, they'll probably move to Silver Lake, Hollywood's new hipsterville, and be on a show like this, where they'll continue to give teenage girls something to talk about during study hall.

THIRD CIRCLE OF HELL

Forced to lie in mud during a sewage storm while being guarded by Cerberus.

Airs: CBS, Fridays, 9 p.m.

Cast: Carla Gugino, Brent Spiner, Peter Dinklage
This fall television executives developed a rather intense fetish for aliens (see sidebar). But while the idea of a room full of suit-wearing E.T. humpers is terrifying, it doesn't hold a candle to the chills produced by Threshold, the most genuinely creepy show since Twin Peaks. After the U.S. Navy discovers a UFO in the middle of the ocean, they call in a hot government analyst (Gugino), who assembles a team of dorky experts, including a strippers-and-booze-loving midget with a taste for applied mathematics (duh, Dinklage) and the actor formerly known as Data. By the time the A-Plus Team finishes sorting through the fractal patterns and triple-helix DNA strands, spaceships exist in four dimensions, sailors are able to withstand bullets, scientists are having identical dreams about creepy crystal forests, and you'll be hooked.

PRISON BREAK

Sick of cops putting people in prison? Try this show about getting out.

Airs: Fox, Mondays, 9 P.M.

Cast: Wentworth Miller, Dominic Purcell, Robin Tunney

Lincoln Burrows (Purcell) is languishing on death row, convicted of a murder he swears he didn't commit. What's a convict to do? If you're pulling from the Shawshank Redemption playbook, Burrows has a few liberating beers with the guards and spends years chipping away at his cell wall. But Fox does the unexpected. Instead of Burrows breaking out, his younger brother Michael (Miller) breaks in, robbing a bank at gunpoint to get sent to the same prison as his brother—all part of an elaborate plan to set him free. So what's Lincoln's plan? Since that's the central mystery behind the show, we don't want to give it away, but it might involve a set of blueprints, paper cranes dropped in the sewer system, and an inmate who may or may not be D.B. Cooper. If you've ever wondered what would happen if 24 was set in Oz, now you can stop wondering.

LOOK WHO'S WORKING!

MARK LINN-BAKER Twins (The WB)

Since 1995, Baker has appeared in one TV movie... and that's it. But now that Balki Bartokomous is on The Surreal Life, it's fitting that his Perfect Strangers cousin, Larry Appleton, is back on TV. Now do the Mypos dance of joy!

It's not easy being Doogie Howser. For years Harris tried everything to avoid being typecast as a genius teen—even starring in Rent. But now he's found his solution: playing an asshole.

HENRY WINKLER Out of Practice (CBS)

Happy days are here again for Winkler, who spent the past five years starring in movies that sounded like gay pornos (I Shaved My Legs for This, Holes). Now the former Fonz has traded his leather jacket for a doctor's white coat. A-a-a-y!

BRENT SPINER Threshold (CBS)

When the U.S. Navy discovers space aliens, they make another realization: Data from Star Trek: The Next Generation is not really a robot—he's a man named Brent Spiner who can play other roles... if they don't require facial expressions.

SARA GILBERT Twins (The WB)

RACHEL BILSON

Endless SUMMER

September marks the return of The O.C. So keep your shades on, 'cause we're in for a lot more Summer, courtesy of the scorching Rachel Bilson.

BY JOHAN MORE PHOTOGRAPHS BY CRAIG DE CRISTO

Sure, grown men aren't supposed to tune in to a teenybopper soap opera like The O.C., but when the show features girl-on-girl action, more fistfights than a prison rec room, and Rachel Bilson strutting around in a bikini, we have no problem putting it on our TiVo Season Pass.

And while moneyed violence and gratuitous lesbianism are fun, the highlight of The O.C. for any Maxim reader can only be the man-eating party girl Summer. Coming in late? Here's all you need to know about your future favorite character. In the first season, she fell for the resident comic book nerd, Seth Cohen (played by Adam Brody), risking her reputation as Miss Popular. But guess what? Seth split town, and Summer went wild with a water-polo-playing boy toy, whom she eventually kicked to the curb after a repentant Seth returned home. OK, we deny just saying all that. Back to the hotness.

Already we've seen Rachel squeeze herself into a Wonder Woman costume as well as a hot little number called the Little Miss Vixen. And if O.C. creator Josh Schwartz has his way ("He likes to dress me up—it's fun as long as you can make fun of yourself"), Rachel may well be donning Lycra again for season three, which kicks off this month.

Rachel has come a long way since appearing in Raisin Bran commercials and the Cub Scout comedy The Wrong Guys, which starred Louie Anderson and more washed-up comedians than the dais of a Friars Club Roast for Howie Mandel. But after her guest spots on That '70s Show and Buffy the Vampire Slayer, the folks at Fox—who know talent when they see it—asked her to audition for the part of Summer. It was a role she was born to play.

The daughter of a screenwriter, Rachel grew up in the Valley, attended Notre Dame High School with Kirsten Dunst, and loves chowing down on Taco Bell and greasy burgers. ("I think the Atkins thing has gotten way out of hand.") The junk-food-lovin' cutie has been keeping busy the past few months, spending her summer in Wisconsin filming The Last Kiss with Zach Braff and Casey Affleck. But that's OK. Though fall is closing in and the days are getting shorter, these photos don't lie: Summer's back, and things are about to start heating up again.

Before Lost came along, television's idea of a gripping desert island mystery was whether or not Gilligan and the Skipper could build a viable raft. But J.J. But even if you don't have a clue what's going on half the time, that's what makes this thriller so engrossing—not that watching the Professor make a radio from coconuts was dull.

MAID to ORDER

Where were you when you found out you got the Earl part?

Right at the audition. The creator approached me and said, "You're the girl!"

Everyone started clapping. It was one of those moments that'll probably never happen again.

Was getting your first gig as exciting?

My first gig was a McDonald's commercial. I got to say, "Welcome to McDonald's." That's when I knew I'd made it.

Since then you've been a badass in Biker Boyz and The Last Ride. Are you some kind of adrenaline junkie?

Not really. Hot cars are nice to look at, but if I'm in one and it's going really fast, I visualize my whole death: the car flipping, the gas leak, the explosion, myself screaming. I think of my family and all the things I didn't get to say to them.

Let's hope you're a good driver.

I'm awful! I've run into my garage. I ran into a tree in my driveway. I literally get in the car, pull out of the garage, and think, focus.

Fast-food commercials, feature films... next come nude scenes, right?

I'd do a nude scene if the character was challenging, not just the naked girlfriend.

You seem pretty tough to upset. What does it take to get you angry?

Anything having to do with my family. I stick up for them like an animal. One time my father was at the hospital with me when I was younger. This woman who looked like a man was headed to the women's room; he thought she was a man, so he went to stop her. Anyway, her friend turned around and yelled, "She's a woman!" ▶ and cursed at my father. I went nuts. I got in her face, defending my father, saying I was going to kick her ass.

All in a hospital gown, too. Any other times you've come to the rescue?

I got kicked out of a club for sticking up for my sister. And I got into a fight that was basically hair-pulling and rolling around on the gym floor. The fights make me sound like a hell-raiser, but I'm not proud of them.

Hooray for all-girls Catholic schools!

No. School was miserable. It was like you going to an all-boys school. Imagine that.

The uniforms just don't seem as sexy.

Our uniforms were the standard deal, but each grade had a different one. Sophomore year was my favorite. I cut my skirt really short, and my girlfriend and I got into wearing really bizarre stockings. Fishnets, polka dots, checkered, even stockings with little cartoon characters on them.

'I cut my skirt really short and got into wearing really bizarre stockings.'

What other sexy duds are lucky enough to call your body home?

The sexiest thing I own is a pair of Prada panties. They're silky and beige with brown. The beige is up front and the brown is in the back.

Beige and brown aren't the same color?

Go figure. How does a guy make the first step toward seeing your panti, er, smile?

If a guy is too aggressive, that's a turn off. And if a guy is too sloppy, with bad breath or untrimmed nose hair. Or too pretty, talking about how his skin is softer than mine. How is that supposed to turn me on?

How do you give the brush-off to guys whose nose hairs breach their nostrils?

I just walk away if I can. Sometimes I'll go shopping, and I'll have to walk out of the store, which is pretty annoying. If I have to say "no" more than twice, I get upset.

Any other "wax-offs" for guys?

Bad lines. One time this guy said, "Damn, you fine!" Then he said, "Can I take you to lunch? My treat." I'm thinking, You offer to take me out to lunch, and I'm gonna split it? No, you're buying me lunch. It's already assumed.

At least you get hit on. How can lesser women solicit such dubious lunch offers?

Be natural. Use what God gave you.

Easy for you to say. God didn't give you a big schnoz and Milk Duds for breasts.

For anyone who's thinking about surgery because they're caught up in what they're "supposed to look like," I say don't do it. There's no need to be what you're not supposed to be. ❧

THE LOST BOYS

For six days Josh Long and Troy Driscoll drifted in the Atlantic Ocean without food or water. They thought they were heading for Africa. They prayed to be taken to heaven. The only place they passed through was hell.

The rip currents off Sullivan's Island in South Carolina are strong enough to pull history. In 1776, 2,000 British soldiers learned this the hard way when they tried to attack the rebel American position at Fort Moultrie by wading across the inlet that separates Sullivan's Island from its neighbor, the Isle of Palms. Halfway across the inlet, the currents grew so treacherous that the British, fearful of being swept out to sea, were forced to retreat. Fort Moultrie was never taken, and to this day signs bearing skulls and crossbones warn swimmers of the cost of tempting the currents.

Josh Long, 17, and Troy Driscoll, 15, didn't know the history of Sullivan's currents when they headed to the island to go fishing on a Sunday morning, last April 24. As a pair of casual young fishermen, they certainly couldn't have guessed they would soon inspire one of the largest coastal search-and-rescue efforts in South Carolina history and make headlines across the world.

The best friends from nearby North Charleston wanted nothing more than to use their JY15 sailboat to fish off the eastern shore of Sullivan's Island, only a few hundred yards from the inlet. Since they were planning to be out for only a few hours, they didn't bother telling anyone their destination when they left that morning, towing the boat behind Josh's Ford Explorer.

It was almost noon when they reached Station 30, the road that ends at the spot where they wanted to launch. As they lowered the 15-foot-long, six-foot-wide, 275-pound boat into the water, the protected inlet appeared glassy and calm. But out to sea, whitecaps dotted blown-out, ragged waves. The National Weather Service had already issued a small-craft advisory.

The boys were unaware of the advisory, but even so they intended to stay close to shore, nesting the boat between the beach and a sand bar 50 yards straight out. Before they shoved off, Troy ran back to the truck for bait. Worried his cell phone would get wet, he pulled it out of his pocket and left it in the truck. It was one of those routine decisions a person makes hundreds of times a day—but this one would have a major impact on the boys' lives.

Back on the beach, the pair pushed the sailboat into the shallows. It was their first run on the boat, a battered hand-me-down from Josh's uncle. It didn't matter to them that it didn't have a mast or sail; it was a boat, good enough for fishing. And since it was a work in progress, they had jokingly painted the name Under Construction on the hull. They weren't even sure what kind of boat it was. Someone had mistakenly told them it was a Sunfish.

The tide was moving out quickly, and as Sunfish like the one in which Josh Long and Troy Driscoll found death in Atlantic Ocean.

Josh Long (bottom) and Troy Driscoll (top) got some TLC from their parents.

Under Construction made for the bar, it hit a surprisingly powerful torrent of water flowing from the inlet's throat. Before they had a chance to bait a hook, the boys realized the current was pulling them past the bar toward the tumbling sea. Leaning into their oars, they tried to fight back to the beach, but the current was severe.

"In 10 minutes the whole beach went to hell," Josh would later say. "As soon as we got in that rip current, I could tell we were in trouble."

With their view of shore growing smaller, they decided to swim for it. Not about to abandon Under Construction on its maiden voyage, Josh lashed himself to the boat, thinking he could haul it in like a draught horse. Easing over the narrow gunwales, the boys began freestyling for the beach. But swimming against the current was hopeless work. Josh remembered something his grandfather once told him: Always stay with the boat. Moments later they climbed back aboard, exhausted and at a loss.

They'd been out barely 20 minutes, and already the shore was so far away that the few people they could see on the beach were just blurry ants. They waved and began to scream for help. Not a head on the beach turned.

THE SEARCH BEGINS

By nightfall family members were concerned. It wasn't like the boys to be out late. Tony Driscoll, Troy's father, called the local Coast Guard at 10:30 p.m., but he had little information to give. He didn't even know where the boys had launched.

"What kind of craft were they in?" asked the dispatcher. A Sunfish "or something similar" was the only thing anyone had heard the boys call it.

Early Monday morning, the Coast Guard called back: A cell phone company had traced the signal from Troy's phone to within a seven-mile radius of a tower in downtown Charleston. It wasn't much to go on, but it was a start.

At least they're together, thought Tony Driscoll. He knew there was no better friend for his son to have with him than Josh. They'd known each other for 10 years. Troy spent so much time at the Longs' that the joke was the Longs had a rent-a-son, though the two looked nothing alike. Troy was blond and shorter than Josh, who was dark, with thick black eyebrows. The younger boy, a chatty jokester, looked up to his older friend, who was more the big brother, protector type. Almost every weekend they got together to fish, camp, or shoot squirrels. Wherever they were, their parents knew they were looking after each other like brothers.

In fact, they were looking after each other like desperate castaways. Out to sea, they huddled within the boat's three-by-four-foot hold. Josh was in severe pain, having fallen and badly jammed his pinkie and fourth finger far into his hand. After riding the current all Sunday, during which time the coast remained tantalizingly within sight, they spent the evening bailing water. When night came they shared a single wet suit for warmth and waited for dawn.

LOST AT SEA

With no land in sight and their bellies aching, the pair began their second day on the water. They fought off fear by keeping watch for passing boats. Then, almost as if it had been conjured from their minds, they spotted one. Chugging along 500 yards away was what looked like a tugboat. They began screaming and waving their oars. As the ship neared them, they exchanged high fives in celebration. ▶

They yelled for help. Not a single head turned their way.

SURVIVAL SCHOOL

Day 1: Within 20 minutes, the riptide drags the boys impossibly far from shore.

Day 2: They scream like wild men, but a tugboat's crew remains oblivious.

Day 3: High seas rock the boat, tossing most of their gear overboard.

Day 4: The boys cool off in the water, but sharks chase them back to the boat.

Day 5: A terrifying encounter with a container ship nearly capsizes the tiny craft.

Day 7: Eighteen miles offshore, fishermen haul in the boys, mere hours from death.

of their imminent rescue. But the tug continued on right past them, its crew totally oblivious.

Troy smacked an oar in frustration. Without a sail or even a mast, their profile on the rolling water was too low to be spotted. To passing craft they were just another ephemeral dash in a whitecapped sea.

"We could die out here, and I haven't even finished high school," Troy said to Josh.

Despite the negatives, they had some things working in their favor. For starters, they were sure that by now a search for them would have been organized. (In fact, Josh's truck had been found, giving the Coast Guard a center point for its search.) They had fishing poles, tackle, and bait, so they could catch fish. Troy even considered eating some of the bait—frozen chum they'd picked up at Wal-Mart—but the smell repulsed him. They weren't that desperate yet.

The boys kept their minds busy by talking: about their families, playing paintball in the neighborhood, the movie Open Water, goofy things they'd done. "We joked around," said Troy. "We tried to make the best of the worst."

At other times a dark mood would fall over them and they'd sit for up to two hours without saying a word, with only the sound of water slapping against the hull for distraction. "I don't want to talk to nobody," Josh told his friend. "I just want to sit and think."

And because they were low-country boys raised on strong religion, they wasted no time getting down to business with Jesus. They wondered aloud what He had in mind for them. Most of all they prayed, or sang worship songs such as "Our God Is an Awesome God."

Those of lesser faith might have questioned whether anybody up there was listening. That night the wind and seas picked up, tossing the boat like a cork. They bailed water, a brutal job for Josh, whose injured hand was now nearly totally disabled. Waves washed over them, sweeping away their bait and tackle box. Unless it rained or fish jumped into the boat, they no longer had any way of obtaining food. In frustration they tossed their fishing poles over the side.

The data could be read only one way: The boys were dead.

THE SEARCHERS

By Tuesday more than 100 Coast Guard personnel were committed to what had become one of the most thorough coastal search-and-rescue missions in South Carolina history. Hundreds of volunteers from across the state were scouring the beaches for any evidence of the boys.

ASK US ANYTHING

Q How can I navigate at sea with no land in sight?

A Mariners of old didn't just swear better than you; they also knew how to haul a load of gunpowder from England to India using only the North Star, a sextant, and a nautical chart. But since celestial navigation is too much to expect from a guy who gets cluster-fucked by Map-Quest, these tricks could be your only hope. You might not be too far from shore, so locate those fluffy white things (a.k.a. clouds). They tend to form over land. Also, if you spot a bird with something in his beak, follow him—he's got food and is likely heading back to his crib on terra firma to eat it. Still nothing in sight but your watery grave? The sun rises in the east, so if you launched in Cali, follow that angry red meatball east to the nearest fish taco stand, grab some breakfast, and call a press conference.

Man-eating raft terrorizes coast

Shortly after the cell phone signal led searchers to Josh's truck, a Coast Guard plane dropped a GPS tracking buoy four miles off Sullivan's Island. Controllers at Charleston headquarters fed its drift course into a computer, along with data on boat type, wind direction, and other variables. The program came back with a suggested search grid: 1,300 square miles, between Bull's Bay, about 30 miles north of Charleston, and Hilton Head, 50 miles to the south. A C-130 search plane, helicopters, and a Coast Guard cutter began working the grid around the clock, along with assorted small boats, a motley Dunkirk-like armada assembled by concerned residents.

But local boaters who knew the coastal waters began to question the grid. Some believed the boys had most likely drifted up the coast instead of down, yet the grid ran 20 miles farther to the south than to the north. The Coast Guard later explained the grid made sense for a Sunfish, which is what they were searching for. Family members of both boys asked the Coast Guard about looking farther north. The response they received couldn't have been more alarming: The Coast Guard was suspending the search.

Sea survival models are based on multiple factors—currents, weather conditions, the kind of clothing people have on, a person's weight. One of the most critical factors is craft type, and a Sunfish is basically a surfboard with a sail. It offers no protection from the elements. As far as the Coast Guard knew, the boys had been totally exposed to 62-degree water for two days. It was data even the most optimistic search expert could interpret only one way.

The boys were dead.

"Without life jackets or provisions, we actually searched beyond the survival rate for that type of boat and conditions," Bobby Nash of the U.S. Coast Guard 7th District explained.

THE LONGEST DAYS

By Wednesday morning, lack of food and water had transformed the boys into the living dead. Mid-70s temperatures stoked a thirst that had built to agonizing extremes after 72 hours without water (not counting a few puddles they'd slurped off the bottom of the boat after a brief rainstorm). Far into the Atlantic, the murky coastal waters had given way to a clear, neon aqua. That looks like Cool Blue Gatorade, Troy thought, staring at the tempting water. "Can I drink just a little bit?" he asked Josh.

The seawater was as deadly as it was tempting. Drinking it would cause them to lose more water than they were gaining.

"If you drink it, you'll die," Josh told Troy.

Instead, they gargled seawater to wet their mouths, talked about Mountain Dew, and took turns hanging off the side of the boat to stay cool. Then one of them noticed a fast-moving shape in the water below. Like something from a bad movie, the dorsal fin of a shark sliced the surface of the water just in front of them. From then on, every time one of them got in the water, it was only a matter of time before a mako or blacktip shark cruised in to investigate.

Once, when Josh was dangling half his body over the side, a six-foot mako sneaked up, coming within feet before Troy jumped up and scared it away. "If he'd wanted to, he could have easily had me," a stunned Josh exclaimed to his friend.

A while later Troy spotted the nebulous shrouds of a jellyfish drifting near the boat. "I'm gonna try and eat one," he said. Josh used his baseball cap as a net and scooped up a jellyfish. Troy ripped off a chunk of slimy flesh and swallowed it. The taste made him gag, but he kept it down. By the next day he was eating jellyfish by the hatful.

They passed the long hours trying to guess their whereabouts. Troy was under the impression they were headed for Africa—4,000 miles away—and Josh joked that he'd make them drinks out of coconuts if that's where they wound up.

Thursday was a breaking point for both boys, especially Troy. Unlike Josh, he didn't have a hat, and during the hotter days he'd stripped to his boxers to stay cool. He was now severely sunburned, with damage not only to his surface skin but also to the softer layers beneath. Blisters all over his upper body gave him constant pain. His lips and tongue were parched white. He rallied in the morning, scavenging more jellyfish, but his spirit was sapped after a container ship nearly overran them. "It was the first time I got mad at God in my life," Troy would later admit. "I asked, 'Why me? What did I do to deserve this?'"

His fingers throbbing and discolored, Josh finally bit the bullet and used his left hand to jerk his knuckles back into place. The screaming pain was the greatest agony he felt during the ordeal, but soon it was Troy's turn to obsess about fingers. He kept talking about cutting off one of his own and eating it. Josh threatened to "lay you out" if Troy did anything rash, so the younger boy contented himself with slicing off pieces of dried skin from his palm to chew on.

"If you die, do you want me to eat you?" he asked Josh.

"It don't matter to me," Josh answered. "But if you die, I'll throw you overboard, because I wouldn't want to live any longer myself."

That evening Troy reached again for the nine-inch fillet knife. "Josh," he croaked in a weakened voice, the knife shaking in his hand, "I want you to kill me."

"If you don't quit talking about dying, I swear I'll punch you in the face," came his friend's reply.

But they both kept talking about it after that. Through their agony, they prayed together that they'd go peacefully in the end. When yet another boat appeared on the horizon, closed in, then passed without notice, it looked like God had made up His mind.

HOW TO ## EAT YOUR FISHING BUDDY

Stuck at sea with no means of sustenance? You may need to resort to extreme measures.

GET IN THE ZONE

The horror of chopping human flesh takes some psychological numbing, but let your survival instinct take over and pounce quickly on the dearly departed—there's a fine line between ready and rotten.

PICK YOUR CUT

Using glass shards, survivors of a 1972 Andes plane crash cut strips of buttocks from the dead and jerked them in the sun. "Ass muscle is like steak," says a doctor who wishes to remain anonymous.

EAT HEARTY

"The vital organs are highest in nutritional value," advises Dr. Anonymous. The Andes survivors prized the liver for its vitamin-rich goodness, but the heart and spleen are as good as energy bars.

OPEN WIDE

Not sure where to dig in? Easy to yank out, the liver hangs just below the rib cage in the right quadrant of the abdomen. To get to the heart, crack open the rib cage or reach up through the diaphragm.

FIND FINGER FOOD

Sailors from the sunken whale ship Essex in 1820 stuffed their pockets with marrow-filled finger bones to nosh on. The Andes survivors crisped fat in the sun to add flava. Bon voyage and bon appétit!

Teenagers prayed to go peacefully after being lost at sea for a week

ASSOCIATED PRESS

SOUTHPORT, N.C.—Two teenagers who had survived nearly a week at sea, clinging to a 14-foot Southport, prayed to go peacefully in the hours before they were discovered. "I'd like to see you," 15-year-old Josh Lee said.

Shane Collier said first he would hug his little brother Troy. "Then I'll give him a kiss and let him know how much he made us worry."

The two nature had put in a 14-hour day that came with a National Weather Service warning for small boats to stay off the water. The reason they had drifted north was that his father who was staying with at the same marina island beach house as Driscoll's family while they awaited word on their boys. The families were in North Carolina for the rescue.

Richard Gierling is Troy's uncle and a member of the Coast Guard Reserve and a police officer in Oregon. He said they were lost.

"You're not going to leave us, are you?"

"No, we won't leave you!" Smith called back.

Smith grabbed Troy's arms and hauled him over the side. The boy flopped on the deck like a fish. Next, Smith lifted Josh by the pants and dragged him aboard. Both boys were sobbing and laughing when they got on the Renegade, 111 miles north of Sullivan's Island.

"They told me they were praying either for God to take them or an angel to save them," Smith later recalled. "They said, 'You're our angel,' but I told them, 'I ain't no angel—I'm just a fisherman.'"

Smith wrapped the boys in blankets and gave them fresh water. "I told them to drink it slowly, but they gulped down about a gallon and a half," he said. They wanted food, but Smith told them to wait until they saw a doctor. Suffering severe dehydration, second-degree sunburn, and exhaustion, the boys were soon admitted to a Southport, North Carolina hospital.

THE HOMECOMING

Three weeks after their rescue, Josh and Troy returned to Sullivan's Island for a welcome-home celebration. They stood on a stage before 500 people—families, friends, rescue workers, search teams, support personnel. Josh had almost completely recovered from the ordeal, but Troy was in for a longer struggle. With extensive nerve damage to his feet, he'd been ordered to remain off them for the next few months. He nevertheless stood up on the stage when two surprise guests—Rick Smith and Ben DeGutis—walked out to greet the boys in the middle of the ceremony. The boys cried as they hugged their heroes.

Near the stage were two giant cakes. One was decorated with the words, WELCOME HOME TROY AND JOSH. The other read, THANKS TO ALL FOR NEVER GIVING UP.

It was a safe bet the message on the second cake wasn't directed at the Coast Guard. After the rescue, family members openly criticized the Coast Guard for calling off the search too soon and not acting on the possibility that the boys had drifted north. "The Coast Guard needs to give a straight answer and say they made a mistake," Matthew Driscoll, Troy's uncle, told the Charleston Post and Courier. The comment might have been a cheap shot—the Coast Guard had been misinformed about the type of craft.

"Certainly, if we thought they were [off North Carolina], that's where we would have gone," Coast Guard commander June Ryan replied, adding that the case would be reviewed.

Both boys say they will return to the ocean, though it's unlikely they'll be in any hurry to go back to the spot where they were swept out to sea. On a morning almost two months after Josh and Troy first set out on their fishing trip, workers on Sullivan's Island could be seen putting up a sign not far from Station 30. It reads: DEADLY CURRENTS, NO SWIMMING, NO WADING, STAY OUT OF THE WATER, $500 FINE, 14 DROWNINGS, DON'T BE NEXT. ☐

Troy slid over the rail and flopped onto the deck like a fish.

"Relax, guys.
I play for San

49ERS

'04 record: 2-14

Off-season action: New coach Mike Nolan and top pick Alex Smith have loads of brains and chutzpah. They'll need 'em to ease the shotgun QB into a tricky West Coast scheme (without a single clutch receiver) while switching the defense from a 4-3 to a 3-4.

'05 buzz: The NFL told Nolan he can't wear a suit on the sideline. The rest of the league will show him he can't turn this once-proud franchise back into a contender in one year.

TITANS

'04 record: 5-11

Off-season action: WR Derrick Mason, DBs Andre Dyson and Samari Rolle, T Fred Miller, and K Joe Nedney are all gone, leaving a team even more gutted than the Niners. But, hey, they drafted the player with the coolest nickname in football—CB Adam "Pacman" Jones.

'05 buzz: Even with USC offensive guru Norm Chow stepping in to inspire a healthy but haggard Steve McNair, Tennessee is officially the AFC's newest cellar dweller.

BROWNS

'04 record: 4-12

Off-season action: Losing Kellen Winslow Jr. for the year (again!) ain't good, but stealing away Pats defensive coordinator Romeo Crennel as the new head coach is a huge step. Still, hyped rookie WR Braylon Edwards had better catch a lot of passes from QB... Trent Dilfer?

'05 buzz: We'll buy you a hot dog when Winslow plays a down. Regardless, the Browns should win a game or five—even if they draft worse than Winslow rides a bike.

FANTASY SLEEPERS

QBs: Carson Palmer, Bengals (18 TDs in his first year starting)
David Carr, Texans
Eli Manning, Giants

DOLPHINS

'04 record: 4-12

Off-season action: Nick Saban's arrival from LSU already has the Fins facing more discipline, and rookie RB Ronnie Brown should be the answer to a 2004 running game whose highlight was Sammy Morris' 523 yards. Plus, there's always Ricky...

'05 buzz: Says our expert, NFL Network lead anchor Rich Eisen, "If these Dolphins give birth to more than four wins, that'd be good." Heck, we'd call that miraculous.

BUCCANEERS

'04 record: 5-11

Off-season action: Coach Jon Gruden scored instant ground-game help in the draft with RB Carnell "Cadillac" Williams. But the O line's still paper-thin, and the defense ain't getting any younger.

'05 buzz: Can you guess which of owner Malcolm Glazer's two teams (the other is Man United) will thrive? Williams and WR Michael Clayton will make this the Bucs' most exciting rebuilding season yet!

BEARS

'04 record: 5-11

Off-season action: To help third-year QB Rex Grossman, the Bears grabbed two offensive studs in rookie RB Cedric Benson and last year's receiving yardage leader, WR Muhsin Muhammad. They also got the goat of the Jets playoff loss to the Steelers, K Doug Brien.

'05 buzz: A lot rides on new O coordinator Ron Turner morphing Grossman into a dependable, injury-free signal caller. Or else da Bears will again be among da worst.

REDSKINS

'04 record: 6-10

Off-season action: Coach Joe Gibbs said Patrick Ramsey was his man, then drafted QB Jason Campbell with the 25th pick. The team also got CB Carlos Rogers (but lost Fred Smoot) and added WRs David Patten and Santana Moss (but lost Laveranues Coles).

'05 buzz: We'll say this for owner Daniel Snyder: He's nuts. And as long as he treats players as toys to fiddle with until he gets bored, his teams will continue to suck.

"At least our mascot's offensive."

SAINTS

'04 record: 8-8

Off-season action: They were dead last in total defense last year, yet three of the Saints' first five draft picks are offensive guys, including OT Jammal Brown and troubled QB Adrian McPherson. They did sign FS Dwight Smith and LB Levar Fisher, but a couple of new starters does not an entire defense make.

'05 buzz: Thank God New Orleans is a city that knows how to drink. That's the only way it'll survive another wild and hopeless season.

&gt; DIANE TALKS SMACK

DAUNTE CULPEPPER

Does Moss-less Minnesota have a Super Bowl shot this year? The best NFL QB not named Peyton isn't afraid to talk like they do.

New year, no Randy. What's gonna happen?

Moss missed most of five games last year, and we still passed for the same yardage—or maybe more—than when he was out there. We've got a lot of guys who can make plays: Nate Burleson, Marcus Robinson, Kelly Campbell, Travis Taylor. And we drafted Troy Williamson; he's going to open up a lot of eyes. I'm excited about this year.

After the trade Randy said he'd lost a friend. Are you guys cool?

I never had a problem with Randy. I had a great time when he was here. He was probably my closest friend on the team, but I think when he got traded he was just lonely.

Why does he get a bad rap?

He makes bad decisions sometimes with the words he chooses. He says the first thing that comes to his mouth, and that's not always the best thing. What's the worst hit you've taken?

In 2000 we were playing the Lions, and Chris Claiborne hit me the hardest I've ever been hit. When I stood up I was dizzy, and when I came back to the huddle I had blood in my mouth.

Did you stay in the game?

Oh, yeah, I stayed in the game.

Was anyone brave enough to haze you as a rookie?

The last night of training camp, the vets tried to pick me up and put Icy Hot all over me. When the first one came in, I grabbed him. It took nine or 10 of them to do it to me. I was a rebellious rookie.

Who's the best QB in the league?

Me.

Where do you see the Vikes finishing this year?

Super Bowl champs.

You're gonna beat my Eagles?

Oh, yeah.

"I never leave home without my ball and chain."

PRIEST HOLMES

Kansas City's versatile back isn't done running—or talking.

As usual, K.C.'s offense was loaded last year. So how'd you go 7-9?

It's a combination of things. Our offense is expected to make big plays, and we didn't always do that.

But doesn't defense win championships?

Coming from Baltimore, I can agree with you. I'm a firm believer that the defense has to show up, and we've got some new guys who are hungry—Sammy Knight, Patrick Surtain, Kendrick Bell, Derrick Johnson. Now you have skill guys that are fighting for positions, so the best that's in them has to come out.

Who's the dirtiest player you've ever played against?

Bill Romanowski is very close, but I actually respect him. You'd be underneath the pile, and this mysterious hand would come out of nowhere and choke you, and you're like, "Who in the world's choking me?" And he's just over there smiling. Of course, he's retired now, so it's all fun to talk about it.

If you could have another player's skill for one game, what would it be?

I'd actually take two. Dance like Ray Lewis, and talk shit like T.O.

Who talks the most trash?

Some of the best trash talkers in the game are guys who don't even hit anybody: defensive backs. They make the most noise ever, and they don't even touch people!

What do they say, exactly?

Half the time they're talking about how you're not going to score on them or don't come their way, and that's the funniest thing, because they don't make tackles. It's usually after you're tackled by somebody else, they're over the pile talking like that.

Who's a better motorcycle rider, you or Kellen Winslow?

Oh, my goodness, that's ridiculous. I can't believe he came off his bike. He needs a little more practice.

FANTASY SLEEPERS

WRs: Nate Burleson, Vikings (with Moss gone, he's Daunte's new go-to guy)
Steve Smith, Panthers
Plaxico Burress, Giants

RAMS

'04 record: 8-8

Off-season action: The good news? Mike Martz shored up last year's porous D by signing LBs Chris Claiborne and Dexter Coakley and S Michael Stone. The bad news? Mike Martz is still in charge. (We think he's an alien.)

'05 buzz: The passing game will light it up as usual, but unless RB Steven Jackson (673 rushing yards and four TDs in 2004) suddenly wakes up as Marshall Faulk circa 2000, these Rams will be lucky to finish .500 again.

BRONCOS

'04 record: 10-6

Off-season action: The Broncos popped another star running back out of their factory with Reuben Droughns, who they shipped to Cleveland. What'd they pick up? A doomed-career therapy group including DE Courtney Brown, DT Gerard Warren, 42-year-old WR Jerry Rice, and RBs Maurice Clarett and Ron "10 Percent Chance of Thunder" Dayne.

'05 buzz: Once again high hopes will be suffocated in this oxygen-deprived town.

FANTASY SLEEPERS

RBs: Carnell Williams, Buccaneers (Coach Jon Gruden likes to run; this rook will be the horse.)
Julius Jones, Cowboys
LaMont Jordan, Raiders

CHIEFS

'04 record: 7-9

Off-season action: DBs Patrick Surtain and Sammy Knight, plus LBs Kendrick Bell and Derrick Johnson, are the latest attempt to fix K.C.'s horrible D. Their offense, of course, is fine. WR Johnnie Morton got cut, but they drafted a guy named Craphonso Thorpe!

'05 buzz: "If the defense can hold teams to 20-some-odd points per game, they'll be dangerous," says Eisen—which is as likely as Dick Vermeil going a day without crying.

PACKERS

'04 record: 10-6

Off-season action: Green Bay tweaked its pathetic secondary by picking up free agent DBs Earl Little and Arturo Freeman and got a draft-day steal in QB Aaron Rodgers. But with that crazy Favre guy still in town, he won't see any meaningful snaps for at least a year.

'05 buzz: WR Javon Walker's on the rise, but a lackluster off-season and two aging stars—Favre and RB Ahman Green—mean this year's Pack may be packing it in early.

SEAHAWKS

'04 record: 9-7

Off-season action: New CB Andre Dyson and DE Bryce Fisher are good, but probably not as good as the guys they replace—Ken Lucas and Chike Okefor. In other words, last year's 26th-ranked defense could be even worse.

'05 buzz: Chances are RB Shaun "Mo' Money" Alexander will run for bunches of yards, QB Matt Hasselbeck will throw bunches of TDs, and coach Mike Holmgren's brow will bunch when the 'Hawks fold in December.

TEXANS

'04 record: 7-9

Off-season action: CB Aaron Glenn was dumped in favor of bitchy Phillip Buchanon to go with Dunta Robinson. First-round DT Travis Johnson is an animal, but new LB Morlon Greenwood is no Jamie Sharper.

'05 buzz: Houston's an ugly place, and this team's even uglier, but oft-sacked QB David Carr gets better every year. Notes Eisen: "Houston could have a playoff run in them this century. But it's still very early in this century."

GIANTS

'04 record: 6-10

Off-season action: With only four picks, the Giants did nothing mind-blowing in the draft. Their big free-agent signing? WR Plaxico Burress, without a doubt the best NFL receiver ever... named Plaxico.

'05 buzz: Brash young QB Eli Manning, who started seven games last year, should learn a lot over a full season. But it's gonna be a few years before anyone's comparing him to his older brother—or his team to the Colts.

RAIDERS

'04 record: 5-11

Off-season action: WR Randy Moss going to Oakland is like Shaq heading to Miami: Even tipsy QB Kerry Collins gains credibility. And pissed-off former Jets backup RB LaMont Jordan will give the Black Hole its first real running threat since Charlie Garner.

'05 buzz: We're not saying they're going all the way... or even halfway. But Moss, and Warren Sapp's mouth, should make Al Davis' West Coast Pirates fun to watch for a while.

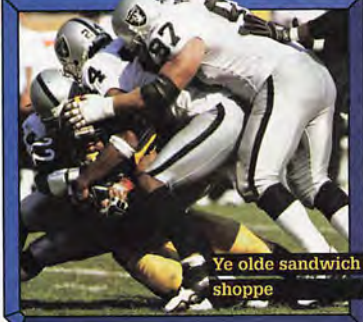

"Hey, buddy, wrong ball!"

"Just...hold me. Yes, that's it."

"Somewhere over the rainbow, bluebirds fly..."

"Ye olde sandwich shoppe"

MEASURING UP: SHANNON & JENNIFER

Cincinnati's and Tampa Bay's finest—finally, a chain gang worth joining.

Bengal pride: The way Cincy plays, there's often more action on the sidelines. "One time the other team's quarterback wrote a letter to one of our girls during the game, asking her out," recalls second-year Ben-Gal Shannon, 28 (left).

"It was ridiculous." Still, she has high hopes: "Coach Lewis is turning the program around. People will have respect for the Bengals when they hit the field this year." At least more respect than they get after hitting opposing players.

Wardrobe malfunction: "I'm so excited to be here," says six-year Bucs vet Jennifer, 26 (right). "I love Maxim." To be fair, our photo shoot wasn't the first time she'd shown a little extra skin. "We had new uniforms last year, and they were halters. In the middle of one half-time show, my top just fell off. There were cameras, but I fixed it while dancing, and I think it happened so fast that nobody saw it." Probably. But we're buying tapes of every game just to be sure.

OFFENSE

QB: #11 DAUNTE CULPEPPER

Vikings This 6'4", 264-pound bazooka rolled up 5,000-plus yards of O last year and says he'd whip Ray Lewis in a fight: "I ain't going to say nobody's going to beat me up."

RB: #21 LADAINIAN TOMLINSON

Chargers LT's scored 60 TDs in four years, and gotten the Bolts to the playoffs. Says Bears LB Brian Urlacher: "He's unbelievable."

FB: #30 CORY SCHLESINGER

Lions In 10 NFL seasons, this bruising 247-pounder has busted over 200 face masks: "I just like hitting people. It's fun."

WR: #87 REGGIE WAYNE

Colts Last year he blew up for over 1,200 yards and 12 TDs. He also had the stones to shove know-it-all MVP Peyton Manning on the sidelines.

WR: #84 JAVON WALKER

Packers He made DBs wet their jocks with 89 catches for 1,382 yards and 12 TDs in '04: "I consider myself one of the best." Care to disagree?

TE: #88 TONY GONZALEZ

Chiefs Let's see... a TE-record 102 grabs last year, six straight Pro Bowls, the most catches in Chiefs history, and a rep as possibly the best ever at his position. We've got Canton on line one.

C: #68 KEVIN MAWAE

Jets He could have sat out after breaking his right hand last year, but, no, Mawae simply taught himself to snap with his left, then was chided by refs for using his cast like a club. Tough.

OT: #71 WALTER JONES

Seahawks At just 31, the best pass blocker in the game has already made five Pro Bowls. And to ensure his name lives on, he's named his twin kids Walterius and Waleria.

OT: #76 ORLANDO PACE

Rams This off-season the Rams signed the pancake-block king to a seven-year, $52.8-million deal that ranks him among the highest-paid linemen in the league. Worth every penny.

G: #66 ALAN FANECAL

Steelers Faneca single-handedly makes Pittsburgh's O line respectable thanks to a killer instinct: "I will hunt you down." Even more impressive, he's done it with epilepsy.

G: #54 BRIAN WATERS

Chiefs Waters wasn't drafted, but he's clawed his way up from practice squad to a spot on one of the league's fiercest offensive lines—and his first Pro Bowl invitation last season.

K: #4 ADAM VINATIERI

Patriots The NFL's clutchiest kicker also hucked a sneaky TD pass against the Rams last year. Take that, Martz!

Presenting the toughest, nastiest,

ass-kickingest gridiron machines in the league. Prepare for Armageddon...

DEFENSE

DE: #90 JULIUS PEPPERS

Panthers Sure, he had 11 sacks, but the cat-quick prowler also returned one interception 97 yards and another 46 for a TD. With Peppers on the field, who needs D-backs?

DE: #97 PATRICK KERNEY

Falcons This destructosaurus notched 13 sacks last year. Says coach Jim Mora: "He just goes and goes. He's relentless."

DT: #99 MARCUS STROUD

Jaguars He's no stat hound, but this dreadlocked 312-pound ball of muscle and meanness plugs more nasty holes than Colin Farrell.

DT: #93 KEVIN WILLIAMS

Vikings Meet the new Sapp: 22.5 sacks in two years, plus a 77-yard fumble-return TD. Best of all, he doesn't flap his trap. Yet.

LB: #51 JONATHAN VILMA

Jets "I don't trash-talk in other languages," says the scrappy, cerebral AP Defensive Rookie of the Year, who speaks four of them. "I want you to understand me when I insult you."

LB: #59 DONNIE EDWARDS

Chargers Despite 151 tackles and five picks, Edwards missed the Pro Bowl. That means a killer chip on his shoulder in '05.

LB: #51 TAKED SPIKES

Bills His name means "great warrior" in Japanese, and it fits the bone-crushing team leader: "Last year it took two guys to help Reggie Williams off the field when I hit him."

CB: #80 TROY BROWN

Patriots Injuries forced the then 33-year-old WR to play D last year. All he did was rack up three interceptions and a Super Bowl ring while also catching passes and returning kicks. Sick.

CB: #26 LITO SHEPPARD

Eagles Lito made five picks last year, taking two back for TDs. And lest you think all CBs are pussies, he played through a broken thumb, too.

S: #31 ROY WILLIAMS

Cowboys This off-season the NFL instituted the "Roy Williams rule," banning horse-collar tackles, after the brutal safety injured four players by dragging them down from behind. 'Nuff said.

S: #20 ED REED

Ravens The AP Defensive Player of the Year led the NFL with nine picks, returning one for a record 106-yard TD... admittedly, against Cleveland.

KR: #24 TERENCE MCGEE

Bills Sorry, Dante. This 5'9" locomotive had 1,370 return yards and three TDs, including a 104-yarder. He's also one hell of a cornerback.

JANETTE

Prepare to drop everything for Philly's sexiest supporter.

Team spirit: "Our fans are amazing," brags Janette, 22, who's beginning her second year with the team. "I'm from Philadelphia, and I can't even walk down my little street without someone yelling, 'E-A-G-L-E-S, Eagles!' Even though we lost in the Super Bowl, just being on the field was amazing. It was surreal."

Skin game: "When we're all in the dressing room, basically we're all naked, but we're totally comfortable with each other. And when we shoot our calendar, all the hair and makeup people see us naked."

Flexible flyer:

"I'm a gymnast, so people are surprised when they see what I can do. My back is double-jointed, so I can put my feet up over my head and stuff like that." Now that's something worth holding out for.

NFL PREVIEW

BENGALS

'04 record: 8-8

Off-season action: Thankfully, RB Rudi Johnson and unpronounceable WR T.J. Houshmandzadeh have re-signed. New defensive coordinator Chuck Bresnahan will try to bring a little swagger to a 19th-ranked squad that stumbled like fraternity drunks last year.

'05 buzz: Showboating WR Chad Johnson will catch enough bombs from rising QB Carson Palmer to almost snap a 14-year streak of nonwinning seasons. Almost.

LIONS

'04 record: 6-10

Off-season action: Yet again they grabbed a WR (Mike Williams) with their first draft pick. Add in veteran TE Marcus Pollard and QB Joey Harrington has no excuse not to light it up—aside from sucking, of course.

'05 buzz: If Joey can't deliver, new backup Jeff Garcia—who we say should start—will try. The last time he played for coach Steve Mariucci, he made his third Pro Bowl. Yes, that was 2002, but this could be the Lions' year.

COWBOYS

'04 record: 6-10

Off-season action: Bill Parcells wants Big D to mean defense again, which explains his first three draft picks: LBs Demarcus Ware and Kevin Burnett and DE Marcus Spears. He also dropped an over-the-hill QB (Vinny Testaverde) for an aging one (Drew Bledsoe). That'll help.

'05 buzz: All-Maxim S Roy Williams and the rooks will crank up the defense while hotshot RB Julius Jones and co. carry America's Team back to the post-season—whether you like it or not.

FANTASY SLEEPERS

TEs: Heath Miller, Steelers (6'5" rookie could be Big Ben's new best friend)
Doug Jolley, Jets
Jermaine Wiggins, Vikings

"Someone needs a hug."

BILLS

'04 record: 9-7

Off-season action: Cement-legged Drew Bledsoe has been, um, sacked in favor of second-year mystery QB J.P. Losman, who's completed all of three passes in his NFL career. At least he'll have ex-U. of Miami rookies Roscoe Parrish and Kevin Everett to throw at.

'05 buzz: Led by LB Takeo Spikes, the NFL's second-best defense will hold its place, and a younger, revamped offense can't help but exceed last year's eighth-worst squad. Right?

PANTHERS

'04 record: 7-9

Off-season action: A lot of stars, like DT Kris Jenkins and WR Steve Smith, are back from the injuries that killed the Panthers last year, and they've added DBs Ken Lucas and Idrees Bashir and versatile G Mike Wahle. But they also lost WR Muhsin Muhammad, who had, oh, 1,405 yards and 16 TDs last year.

'05 buzz: If they stay healthy, the Panthers could challenge the Falcons for the NFC South crown. But we're not holding our breath.

JAGUARS

'04 record: 9-7

Off-season action: The biggest gamble of the off-season was the Jags' surprise drafting of superfreak QB/TE/WR Matt Jones in the first round. Will he be QB Byron Leftwich's Randy Moss or a taller, whiter Kordell Stewart?

'05 buzz: Gimpy RB Fred Taylor won't roll up the points, but massive DTs Marcus Stroud and John Henderson will help the defense make most offenses look like the 49ers' taxi squad. If only they played in the NFC...

CARDINALS

'04 record: 6-10

Off-season action: Two-time MVP Kurt Warner and scrappy rookie RB J.J. Arrington should boost the 27th-ranked offense. Adds Eisen, "They've got a more ferocious logo."

'05 buzz: Warner's an old gunslinger with a pair of hot young targets, WRs Anquan Boldin and Larry Fitzgerald. Sack master DE Bertrand Berry and rookie CB Antrel Rolle will make noise on D. Those facts—and the fact that the NFC West blows—are promising signs.

JETS

'04 record: 10-6

Off-season action: WR Laveranues "Spelling Bee" Coles has returned from the Deadskins in exchange for WR Santana Moss. He'll join former Titans offensive coordinator Mike Heimerdinger and the Jets spellbinding first draft choice, K Mike Nugent!

'05 buzz: Can defensive coordinator Donnie Henderson and stud LB Jonathan Vilma lift the Jets past the Patriots and into the Super Bowl? Oh, wait, we're talking about the Jets.

> SCOTT TALKS SMACK

JONATHAN VILMA

We grill 2004's AP Defensive Rookie of the Year about missed kicks, hot chicks, and time travel.

The Jets missed the AFC title game by a field goal last year. What's next?

We came close, but obviously close doesn't cut it in this league. We have to get over the hump. Why can't you guys beat the Patriots? They know how to get the job done.

Are they more talented? I don't think so. They're not that good. After my first game against them, I was like, "That's it?" I was expecting big, great, miraculous plays. It's a matter of them tuning in to the little things, which we have to pay more attention to. Will new kicker Mike Nugent make the difference? They started him at 45 yards, and he didn't miss for three practices. I'm real excited about that. I played against him in the Fiesta Bowl, and he was kicking the life out of the ball back then, too. Why aren't there Jets cheerleaders? Good question. You're going to have to ask boss man Woody on that one. I wouldn't mind having them. What's it like playing in a place called Giants Stadium?

It's a little tough. I hope we get a new place soon. It's always great to be home and not worry about another team playing in your stadium. And after the game is the roughest part, because the drive back is two hours in New York traffic.

Which feels better, sacks or INTs?

Interceptions for touchdowns feel better. But for getting the rage out, sacks are always great. When you get to the quarterback, really lay it on him, it feels good. You went to Miami. Are the women hotter there?

Miami women are beautiful, but New York women have a little more swagger. And they know how to dress.

Will time travel be possible in our lifetime?

I don't know, but I'd be the first one to go. I'd go to the future. You're an Academic All-American with a degree in finance.

Got any tax tips? [Laughs] None that are legal!

"Oh, was this your football? I'll give it back as soon as I'm done with it."

> DIANE TALKS SMACK

DONOVAN MCNABB

The Eagles' charismatic QB throws us his lines on acting, puking, and soup.

Tell us the truth: In the Super Bowl, were you vomiting in the huddle?

I was fine. I don't know how that started, but I wasn't sick. I didn't throw up on the field. Philly fans can be fickle. Is it tough playing for them? It's not tough to play in Philly at all. It's actually exciting. Anytime you're in a place that loves their sports, and continues to back them no matter what position they're in, that's something that's good to be a part of. These guys are always here, and we feed off their adrenaline.

You were on George Lopez. Is there more acting in your future? I hope so. Hopefully I'll move into films on HBO and Showtime, which would lead me into the big ones with Will Smith and all the rest of them. Your mother's been quite the actress in the Chunky soup ads.

I had to work on her. She was a rookie—she's working on her game as well. It's something we'll pass down to the rest of our family. What's your take on T.O.'s holdout? It's a situation I stay away from. It's none of my business. I focus on the field and go from there. I'm sure he's working hard wherever he's at, and when the time comes he'll be ready to go just like we will.

We hear that he has to feed his family. Can't your mom hook him up with some canned goods?

We've had dinners for the offense, so he's been over to the house. Everything will be fine.

Do you feel healthy?

I feel good. I'm a little sick right now. I'm going to throw up, I guess, I don't know.

FANTASY SLEEPERS

Defense: Vikings (new DBs Smoot and Sharper mean fewer TDs, more INTS than last year) Cowboys Jets

"May I cut in, please?"

RAVENS

'04 record: 9-7

Off-season action: Ex-Titans ball hog Derrick Mason and first-round steal Mark Clayton give the Ravens a major receiving upgrade for new O coordinator Jim Fassel. LB Peter Boulware got cut over cash, but hey, Jamal Lewis is out of the clink!

'05 buzz: With great defense and good running, QB Kyle Boller doesn't even need to be excellent to Diler this squad right back into the playoff hunt.

FANTASY SLEEPERS

Ks: Lawrence Tynes, Chiefs (K.C. scores more than almost anyone, so lots of FGs and PATs) Nate Kaeding, Chargers John Carney, Saints

STEELERS

'04 record: 15-1

Off-season action: Plaxico Burress is out, replaced (sort of) by former 49ers WR Cedrick Wilson. Rookie TE Heath Miller should snare a few TDs to make up the difference.

'05 buzz: Almost all the pieces are still in place, but why don't we have confidence? Maybe it's the way QB Ben Roethlisberger threw balls to playoff defenders like they were free T-shirts. We do know one thing: They'll lose more than two games this year.

"You are one seriously fat bumblebee."

FALCONS

'04 record: 11-5

Off-season action: Though it gave up DT Ed Jasper, the defense should get even better with the addition of LB Edgerton "Mini Ray Lewis" Hartwell (97 tackles for the Ravens last year).

'05 buzz: With first-round pick Roddy White, plus Dez White, Brian Finneran, and Peerless Price, Ron Mexico has a fleet of mediocre WRs to drop his sometimes wild passes. But he's also got Pro Bowl TE Alge Crumpler, and we hear he's pretty good on his feet. The Falcons will fly again.

CHARGERS

'04 record: 12-4

Off-season action: First-round DE/LB Shawne Merriman should bring speed to the defense. The Chargers also re-signed QB Drew Brees, and they've still got super RB LaDainian Tomlinson and top TE Antonio Gates. In other words, they're stacked—on offense, at least.

'05 buzz: We admit we missed the ferry on this Cinderella team from last year. So let's all agree the Chargers are no joke...and dare we say they'll win the AFC West again?

EAGLES

'04 record: 13-3

Off-season action: The Eagles could've done nothing and still won the NFC East again. Instead, they made 11 solid if unspectacular draft choices. At least a couple of those guys, like DT Mike Patterson and WR Reggie Brown, are bound to have an impact.

'05 buzz: Provided the front office can get T.O. back on the field, and McNabb can learn the two-minute drill, they'll once again be NFC title favorites. For what that's worth.

COLTS

'04 record: 12-4

Off-season action: On offense WRs Marvin Harrison, Reggie Wayne, and Brandon Stokley are all returning, as is franchised RB Edgerrin James. Unfortunately, the Colts' slightly less-impressive defense (29th in yards given up per game last year) is also unscathed.

'05 buzz: We don't care if Peyton Manning throws 100 touchdown passes. As Eisen points out, "The Colts have Patriotitis, and there are no known antibiotics at this point."

PATRIOTS

'04 record: 14-2

Off-season action: With D coordinator Romeo Crennel off to the Browns and O man Charlie Weis heading up Notre Dame, Bill Belichick is left pulling levers all by his lonesome. "They're like the black knight in Monty Python and the Holy Grail," says Eisen. "It's just a flesh wound." '05 buzz: The Patriot's hot first-round pick? Unknown guard Logan Mankins. But we've quit doubting the greatest NFL dynasty to win all its Super Bowls by three points. They'll be fine.

DOUBLE TROUBLE: TAVIA & RACHEL

The beauties of Big D and the Big Easy rip the competition—and our pounding hearts—to shreds.

Feeling it: For 22-year-old second-year Cowboys cheerleader Tavia (left), it's hard not to get caught up in the on-field action: "Our uniform is really tight, so I've never had a problem popping out of it. But when I'm cheering, I smile with my mouth open, so I always have hair flying in and sticking to my lipstick and going down my throat, which is kind of uncomfortable when you're trying to breathe and dance at the same time." Funny, we have the same problem during aerobics!

Costume party: The Saints have their woes, but their cheerleaders running out of skimpy outfits ain't one of them. "We all get together in the locker room, and we usually don't get to see the halftime show because we're changing—we have seven different uniforms," explains Rachel (right). And after games the 5'10" 19-year-old can't wait to cut loose. "New Orleans is awesome. We're always partying." Tall hot chicks getting blitzed on Bourbon Street? What a drag.

JINXED!

THE MAXIM CURSE

Last year we put Kellen "Kniewel" Winslow on our All-Maxim team. Here's who's screwed in 2005!

Phil her up: To make up for last year's Super Bowl "come-back," Eagles coach Andy Reid runs the two-minute drill on every possession. The pace causes McNabb to heave Chunky soup every game, and the team goes 1-15. But for once they don't choke in the playoffs!

Calling Jamal: After going to jail for using a cell phone in a drug deal, the Ravens' Lewis cancels his FamilyTime plan. He falls out of touch with friends, gets depressed, and loses his edge. However, the Ravens play the Browns twice, so he still runs for 1,000 yards.

Down Pats: Tom Brady's retinas are fried by Bridget Moynahan's hotness and Bill Belichick picks up a near-fatal fleece sweatshirt allergy. But after Troy Brown steps in at QB and Bill returns in a wife-beater, New England wins Super Bowl XL by (surprise!) three points.

Skins disease: Washington owner Dan Snyder hires John Madden as coach for $20 million a year, trades Clinton Portis for Maurice Clarett, and names Tom Landry's corpse O coordinator. It's far too late to cure his megalomania, and his head explodes in week 8.

Lion share: Steve Mariucci's finally got his pet QB, Jeff Garcia. First game, he's passing for 500 yards—until stud WRs Charles Rogers, Roy Williams, and Mike Williams collide on a crossing route, snapping their collarbones and ending their seasons simultaneously.

Phish food: With Ricky Williams back, Miami's ready to rock. But he's brought so much quality Acapulco gold that everyone totally melows out. Half the players quit to form a jam band, while the rest join NFL Europe's Amsterdam Admirals. Bummer, dude.

PLAYOFF PREDICTIONS

JAIME

The Fins were ice cold on the field last year, but at least their sidelines were smokin' hot.

Top cop: "I'm a certified Florida police officer," the Dolphins' Jaime, 26, reveals. "On the beat I got a lot of surprised reactions, but men usually ended up being very cooperative."

Then again... "One time I was mistaken for a stripper. I pulled a guy over at 3 A.M., and he asked me if it was for his birthday. It really was his birthday. I couldn't help but laugh."

Getting Sapp-y: "My favorite player is Warren Sapp. He does what he wants to do, and if you don't like him, he doesn't care. He doesn't suck up, he doesn't play games. He's himself, and I like that."

Trouble-free: "I've been very fortunate that I haven't had anything too embarrassing happen while cheering. Friends of mine have had a chicken cutlet fall out. You know what I'm talking about? A fake boob — chicken cutlet. Not me. I've got plenty."

DANCE FEVER

More than 22 million people watched Kelly Monaco shake her bonbon on the night she scored perfect 10s on Dancing With the Stars, the biggest summer TV hit since Survivor washed up into living rooms five years ago. Why all this obsession over a little song-and-dance show? Maybe it's because, deep down, people have been craving a finely executed waltz—or maybe it's because Kelly was being thrown around like a Hacky Sack wearing little more than two handkerchiefs and a twist tie. Whatever the reason, Kelly's no longer just some regular on General Hospital, where she's been starring in the fantasies of millions of housewives. Now she's starring in their husbands' fantasies, too, as the best thing to happen to dancing since Disco Demolition Derby night at Comiskey Park.

Is it true your first words upon winning were "Holy shit!"?

Yeah. I couldn't believe I said it. Then the host, Tom Bergeron, said something to me, and I went, "Oh, my God! Are we still on air?" And he said, "Yes, honey, we are!" I think the second thing I said was something like "Holy Christ." I was trying to cover up the "Holy shit!"

Good save. You sure didn't look like you were going to win after the first episode, when judge Bruno Tonioli said your face looked like somebody had died.

Ah, the notorious first episode. I was shocked that he went there—my family was appalled. My little nephew looked at my mom and said, "Did somebody die?" He really thought someone had died. However, it gave me a kick in the butt and made me work even harder.

Did you want to kick Bruno's ass?

No, no, no. That's stooping to their level. I wanted to prove to myself that I could do better than they thought. That first week actually worked in my favor—it got the audience rooting for me.

Don't you think the fact that your dress broke also helped some?

Ha! Maybe for the judges. It showed them I had a professional side and lots of determination. One of them gave me a standing ovation, and not because the dance was perfect. ►

We may still have two left feet after Dancing With the Stars champion Kelly Monaco gave us private dance lessons, but we also have two of the happiest eyeballs on Earth. And now, twinkle toes, so do you...

After the wardrobe malfunction, what went through your head?

Is there a five-second delay? It's a live show, and this kind of situation hadn't been talked about. The whole Janet Jackson thing flew through my mind in a brief second and the network getting fined and people getting fired and stuff like that. It was really scary. But I also thought, If I have to walk through the rest of this dance and hold myself up the whole time, then that's what I'm gonna do—because I'm certainly not going to walk off the stage and give up.

Why do ballroom dancers dress so sexy?

Not that we're complaining, mind you. They go with the dances, especially the Latin dances, like the samba. It's booty-shakin' fun, you know? The dresses have to be short and sexy and skimpy because you have to see the legs, the arms, the hands, the feet—all the movements are so specific. Whereas with the waltz, knees don't come into play so much. I was scared of the dresses at first. When I saw them I laughed and said, "You've got to be kidding me!"

Describe a day in your life while competing on Dancing With the Stars.

I was up at 5 A.M., in work at General Hospital by 6:30, where I'd bang out 30 pages of dialogue and 15 scenes. I'd be done with that by three or four in the afternoon and at dance rehearsal by five, which would end around eight or nine. Then I'd come home and study another 20 or 30 pages of dialogue for the next day, eat, go to sleep, and do it all over again in the morning.

'It's booty-shakin' fun. The dress has to be short and sexy...'

Now that you're formally trained, who's a better dancer: Travolta or Swayze?

Oh, gosh. That's like comparing me and John O'Hurley! They're different eras, you know? This sucks because Ghost is one of my favorite movies, as corny as that sounds. And you've got Dirty Dancing and "nobody puts Baby in a corner." But Travolta, can you beat that? I don't know if you can. My money's with John.

What's the biggest mistake guys make while dancing?

You've got to loosen up and stop worrying about being judged. Have fun—who cares if you look like a dork? Move to the music, however your body moves. There's no wrong in dancing.

But what about those guys who grind on girls? Is that part of it?

OK, now that's a personal-space issue. You can't intrude on a woman unless you're invited in, but so many men end up in a corner and just kind of bob their heads or tap their feet. Go out! Dance! Be free! I'd rather see a guy out there making an ass of himself than holding up the wall.

Were there any romantic sparks between you and your partner?

Absolutely not. Alec is a gentleman, an extremely sophisticated, smart young man.

Never once did I feel violated or that anything we were doing was inappropriate or uncalled for. He was extremely professional.

But that greasy Russian had his grubby paws all over you!

If that's what the audience is seeing, then we did our job well. That's what these dances are about—the passion and the lust and the vulnerability. If they're seeing that and want to be in his position, that's wonderful. I think I'm very conditioned from being in this business, especially on soaps, because it's just part of the job.

Wait, you mean those passionate soap opera kisses aren't real?

They're awkward, they're weird, they're not passionate. It's a fake soap kiss. It's the last thing either of us wants to be doing. Just walk up to some random girl and kiss her—it's not the most comfortable place to be in.

What was the most ridiculous soap opera plot you were ever involved in?

Oh, Jesus. Do you have an hour? Let's see. I was a vampire for about three years, back when I was on Port Charles. I had a really ridiculous story line when I first got on General Hospital. I was a treasure-hunting, boat-salvaging, gold-digging moron card shark. Now I'm dating a Mob tycoon. It's very Bonnie and Clyde.

OK, so you win the big dance contest.

You go to bed, wake up...who is the first person to call you?

Well, I didn't go to bed. After the contest, ABC threw a party for all the people involved. Then ►

'I was a vampire for about three years.'

I went home and studied 45 pages of dialogue for General Hospital. Then, at 2 A.M., we had to do Good Morning America, but we had to wait for about four hours because of the bombings in London. I left there at 6:30, was at work at nine, and worked for the next 12 hours. I was close to a nervous breakdown. I got home and was hysterical, just crying in my car.

It must take a lot to get under the skin of a tough Philly girl like you.

Yeah, absolutely. I was raised in a pretty rough neighborhood in northeast Philadelphia. See, northeast Philly is sectioned off in blocks. You'll have one block where a certain demographic of people live, and the next block is another demographic. So you cross the street and you're in some serious trouble.

We heard you're a fan of extreme sports...

Yeah, I was in the Hi-Tec Adventure Racing Series, in an all-women's division. My first race was at night, and it consisted of 12 miles of off-road running, three or four miles of kayaking, and 12 or 15 miles of mountain biking. In between each of them was a Marine-type obstacle course, whether it was orienteering or scaling 15-foot hurdles or diving in mud pits. My team came in second.

And you saved lives as a lifeguard!

I was a lifeguard at this resort in the Poconos, and there were probably 100 people in the pool, and one of the kids hit the bottom. Something took over, and somehow my little body picked up a five-foot-eleven, 180-pound kid.

Let's recap. You're this extremely hot, petite woman who works 18-hour days, wins dance contests, pulls kids from pools, and does extreme triathlons!

I don't think I'm that tough. I think it's heart and inner strength. I'm like an ant. I look little, but if you pick and poke enough, I'll bite back.

PAUL RUDD

He was the anchorman who wore Sex Panther cologne, did the last season of Friends, studied theater at Oxford, and appears in this month's The 40-Year-Old Virgin. What can't Paul Rudd do?

PAUL'S POETS

SHANE MACGOWAN

"He makes the ugliest things sound beautiful."

TOM WAITS

"In my opinion, there really isn't a purer artistic soul on Earth."

NICK CAVE

"Like MacGowan, he has such a sardonic and rapier wit."

STEPHIN MERRITT

"'Love Is Like a Bottle of Gin' is a brilliant song."

In The 40-Year-Old Virgin, you play a guy who's still pining for someone he broke up with two years ago. How do you get over that?

Do you ever get over that? My character in the movie is a borderline stalker. Maybe not even that borderline. Perhaps it takes time. Or alcohol. A lot of people think that drinking is a bad idea, but I go against the grain.

What advice would you have for someone who really is a 40-year-old virgin?

Put all of your energy into models, especially really intricate ones. Anything nautical, because with any kind of shipbuilding, you'll have a lot of masts and turrets and hoists to focus on.

In the movie you guys tell Steve Carell to get his chest waxed, then watch him scream in agony. Was that real?

Yes, that was all done on-camera. The key to making something like that funny is you really have to do it. He'd never had his chest waxed before, so those reactions are really Steve—my favorite is when he yells, "Kelly Clarkson!" That's real blood. I'd never been in a room with a man being waxed before. Well, besides my dad.

Speaking of realism, did you grow that mustache for Anchorman?

That was all real—my hair, my sideburns, my mustache. What's the point of having facial hair if you can't grow it in weird ways? What I really wanted was the Wilford Brimley, where it would cover my lips so you don't even see my mouth. Just like Sam Elliott, only minus all of the cool things about Sam Elliott.

How did people react to it?

I think my wife got a kick out of it because it was just so scummy looking, especially when it got sweaty. Speaking of sweaty, one time I ran into this elevator and my hair was all long and curly and I was in this T-shirt that said MUSTACHE RIDES, 25 CENTS. There was an older couple in there who I could tell couldn't wait to get out of the elevator.

It's hard to believe a man with that kind of T-shirt would leave his first job on NBC's Sisters to go study Jacobean theater at Oxford University.

I always looked at the people I liked and admired—like Daniel Day Lewis—and they never made obvious choices and all came up through the theater in a certain way. I remember my agent thought I was crazy.

What is it that you like so much about Jacobean theater, anyway?

Well, when I got there I realized that I didn't like it. I got bored. They all follow the same pattern: murder, incest, then suicide.

Just like Friends. You were on the last two seasons. What was that like?

Unexpected. I was only signed on to do two episodes. I never had a contract. I wasn't supposed to be a recurring character, but they'd shoot an episode, and then say, "We have one in a week, would you want to do it?" It was that casual. It was the easiest thing I'd ever done—I was essentially a prop, but I never quite grew accustomed to it. I would just look around and go, "This set is recognized in Bangladesh." Right after that last episode, they packed up those sets and shipped them to the Smithsonian. Maybe I should have stolen something.

Before you hit it big, you DJ'd bar mitzvahs and weddings. How fun was that?

It was one of my first jobs out of college. I did it for about a year and a half. It paid pretty well, and I was able to go out on auditions. That was one job I didn't enjoy. But I pretended I did, since there were some 13-year-old kids that were going to have a really good time because I was in control of their party.

Name one song you never want to play or hear again.

People would ask for the most clichéd songs, like "What I Like About You" by the Romantics. Or "Mony Mony" by Billy Idol, where they'd add "Hey, hey you, get laid, get fucked!" which, when you're 13, is like the greatest thing ever.

Anything strange go down at those gigs?

I was DJing in Los Angeles—actually, to say I DJ'd makes it sound as if it's cool, and this wasn't cool at all. But I did Dave Winfield's 40th birthday party and met Gene Autry. I did another party where Neil Diamond was a guest and played "September Morn" while he danced with the birthday girl and sang it to her. Sometimes there were moments where I'd think, This is crazy, but other times I would finish at 2 A.M. and it was just... you can only take so much Right Said Fred, you know?

In your first film, A Question of Ethics, you were listed as Kenny Chin—but that's not your real name.

When I was in college, some buddies of mine stole a big ceramic clown from a miniature golf course. And I made a whole series of movies on my camcorder involving this clown showing up in weird places. Anyway, we named the clown Kenny Chin.

So what you're saying is you named yourself after a ceramic clown.

There's a really funny story behind A Question of Ethics. It wasn't even a movie—it was a 20-minute thing for kids about cheating in school. On the last day, we did the big redemption scene where my character comes to his senses. And the director came over, and he was like, "That was great, we just want to do an alternate take." And they gave me this script that was all about being saved and how I came to my senses because I accepted Jesus into my life, and if I hadn't, I was going to hell. I was really freaked out and didn't want to do it. They panicked, because the church financed the film.

That's certainly a question of ethics.

A question of being a complete asshole and not telling the lead actor it's a Christian film! I said, "One, I don't really believe in this, and two, I'm Jewish." It turned up on some Christian channel years ago, and somebody called my sister and said, "I think I just saw your brother in this weird Christian movie." She said, "No, there's this guy named Kenny Chin who looks just like him."

Speaking of strange movies, what's the deal with Gen-Y Cops?

That movie is just ridiculous. I have no idea why they offered me a part in a martial arts movie—I couldn't be less of an action guy. But it was filming in Hong Kong for two months, and I'd never been to Asia. Half the movie was in Cantonese—it was so weird, there's no way I was going to turn it down. I mean, it's called Gen-Y Cops. Come on!

You've had some really high-profile gigs, so people know your face, even if you're not a household name. How does it feel to be "that guy"?

I might get recognized, but certainly people don't know my name—sure, they do in some circles—but all of my favorite actors were "that guys"... [At the diner where the interview is taking place, a guy suddenly walks up and asks, "Are you Paul Rudd?" then takes a picture.]

Wow. That was a freaky coincidence...

I can't believe this. That couldn't have been timed better. You know, I think I'm totally fine with being "that guy."

SCREEN PLAY

A palm-size projector that throws instant video onto anything that'll stay still. Like fat people.

What's the only drawback to a weekend camping trip with the guys? No big-screen TV! Not any longer: Mitsubishi's Pocket Projector is a 14-ounce DLP-powered box the size of a pack of hot dogs, but stuffed with movie-screening power instead of smoked cow lips. Rather than bore yourself with actual conversation, hook up a portable DVD player for some Cabin Fever in the woods. You can even plug in a PlayStation for a little open-air Madden. Cast a 20-inch 800x600 SVGA image from a foot and a half away—or a 40-incher from a yard's distance—onto the tent, your Escalade, or the side of the snowdrift you're hopelessly trapped in. An optional car-rechargeable battery pack juices 2.5 hours of continuous play, and the three-color LED lighting system lasts for 10,000 hours of use without getting hot like regular projectors (go ahead and let it snuggle in your lap). Best of all, it also hooks up to laptops so you can play your worthless PowerPoint presentations. Business expense? You betcha. ($799, mitsubishi-presentations.com)

A DLP chip projects light off of 480,000 micro-mirrors.

TIME BANDIT ($60)

Is telling time too damn easy for you? Get a Tix LED clock. The number of lighted squares in each field represents one of the numbers on a digital clock, which means you have to count to know this thing reads 12:34. The light pattern shifts with each time change; set it to update every second, and let the seizures begin! (thinkgeek.com)

GRAB BAG

Head back to school with a collection of schwag worthy of Rodney Dangerfield.

SPELLBOUND ($6)

It took an Invention Quest contest by Staples to come up with an idiotic idea we can't believe we didn't think of first: a combination lock with letters instead of numbers. Set the WordLock to one of 1,000 real words, like BACON, and you'll never forget it. Just don't use your name, Nancy. (staples.com)

INSTANT REWIND ($170)

Only one thing can ease the pain of being stuck in rush-hour traffic: your radio. Thank the satellite gods for Sirius' portable Sportster Replay. It boasts 120 digital channels and can store 44 minutes of live broadcasts, TiVo-style, for your rewind-ing or fast-forwarding pleasure. Hit pause on the Jets-Pats game as you run to the gas station john, or replay that Scissor Sisters song you love so much. (sirius.com)

ROLL MODEL ($60)

Half a world away, real warriors fighting in real tanks are guaranteeing your right to play with this fake one in the comfort of your parents' basement. The Airsoft Leopard II A5's remote rotates the turret 320 degrees, raises the gun 20 degrees, and fires 6 mm battle bullets from up to 82 feet away for a full hour. Git 'r done! ### BLIND ME ($70)

You got the cards, you got the chips, and you've got the friends on tilt. But calculating blinds for a quick-fix tourney is about as fun as 52 pickup. The exclusively patented ESPN Poker Club Tournament Clock automatically counts chips, sets the blinds, and ticks off the time before each round's increase. ### CARD SHARK ($200)

While your iPod friends high-five over their 20 GB drives, you can sit smugly with Panasonic's SV-SD100V. The 4.2x4.2 cm player stores music on removable SD memory cards (available in sizes up to 1 GB) for music on the relative cheap. Load up stacks of playlists, and swap away. # THREE OF A KIND

FLAT-OUT FINEST

Think you can't afford these HDTVs?
Your credit card begs to differ.

THE PLASMATRON ($3,500)

For home-theater buffs and those of us banned from movie theaters, Dell's 42-inch W4200HD, with its built-in HDTV tuner and 40-watt detachable speakers, is worth the year's DVD budget. Store individual brightness and contrast settings for each of the TV's whopping 13 A/V inputs while you drool over The Two Towers and The Return of the King on individual resizable picture-in-picture windows. Slip on your Frodo mask for extra oomph. (dell.com)

TECH PLASMA

Millions of colored phosphor dots are lit up individually (or not).

LIQUID CRISPNESS ($2,400)

Need to distract attention from your horrible living conditions? Try a snazzy LCD TV on the wall. Samsung's LN-R328W is one of the best bargains going: 32-inch wide screen, 3,000:1 contrast ratio, and HDMI, component video, and PC inputs come standard. Motion blur and video noise that dog other LCDs are tamed, while a 170-degree viewing angle means you can lie back during Cribs and dream you're on unemployment. Oh, wait—you are. (samsung.com)

TECH LCD

REAR MONSTER ($1,800)

CRT rear-projection sets are the General Lees of HDTV: old, reliable, and ready to roll. At 20 inches deep, the 121-pound Zenith R50W47 can't hang on your wall—but it will give more screen for your money. Digital upconversion improves your childhood collection of The Dukes of Hazzard VHS tapes, while HD Focus sharpens the picture automatically. As for the unused wall space, use the cash you saved to buy something classy—like a Boss Hogg poster. (zenith.com)

NOW YOU KNOW

DVR DIVIDENDS

Three ways to record your WrestleMania.

Cable/DirectV
The DVR units supplied by cable or satellite companies are free, but there is a monthly fee. Many of the units have dual tuners to tape two shows simultaneously, unlike TiVo. DirectV's NFL Sunday Ticket SuperFan package, for instance, lets you watch eight NFL games at once and pull up real-time stats, but it's not available in all areas—so couch potato, beware.

TiVo The iPod of DVRs will cost you at least $99 for the hardware, plus a subscription fee. Though TiVos don't record in HDTV format yet, high-end units can store 300 hours of regular TV and burn shows to DVD. You can also program your TiVo over the Internet—or use TiVoToGo to load your laptop with video, 'cause nothing kills a day at the office like eight hours of Barney Miller.

Windows XP Media Center
Although there's no monthly fee, Microsoft's system will set you back about $550. But XP can record TV and share video, music, and photos with any set in the house. Media Center supports HDTV tuners, unlike TiVo. The capabilities are great, but unless you're comfortable tossing around terms like "802.11g router" and "IR blaster," you'll be safer in TiVo-land.

Basketball. Soccer. Curling. Live streaming video from Verizon Broadband gives you front row seats. And puts you on the edge of them. Visit richerdeeperbroader.com and tell us the score.

POWERHOUSE ($300)

Every good sound system needs a mission control. Sony's STR-DE698/B AV receiver has 30 station presets and supports an array of audio formats, 90 watts per channel output, and two component video inputs. The Digital Cinema Sound System with Cinema Studio EX is also the cheapest way to get 7.1 theater noise to fill your living room. While the Remote Commander remote control runs it all, plunk yourself down and pity those who don't have eight speakers around their heads. (sonystyle.com)

HOME THEATER

TAKE IT IN THE EAR

Four great ways to cover your apartment in broken glass.

SPEAKER-EASY ($697)

Movies aren't just about images: They're also about sound and occasionally smell (thanks, Odor-Rama!). We can't help you with the latter, but for audio, you won't top a set of Paradigm Cinema 70 CTs, which are to your standard HTiB (home theater in a box) speakers what a fine chardonnay is to a bag of wine. Plug these into your receiver for sound that will make you feel like you're actually in your local multiplex, at a price that will leave enough left over to spring for popcorn and the big soda. (paradigm.com)

PACKAGE DEAL ($450)

You just bought a car and your psoriasis is largely under control, yet something's missing. Could it be... noise? For an all-in-one punch in the face, Pioneer's HTP-3600 delivers 1,000 watts of total 5.1 system power. Direct Diffuse technology bounces the rear speakers' signals off your walls to create surround sound that will have you wishing you were blind so you could savor it more fully—but then you'd miss out on the sleek aluminum finish, which reminds you that you have, indeed, made it. (pioneerelectronics.com)

MUSIC BOX ($1,599)

Arcam has an obsession: They want to make high fidelity more stylish than ever before (we tell them they should get out more, but you know Arcam). The result of their fixation is the Solo music receiver and CD player, a slender unit with its own 50-watt-per-channel amplifier—at last, your complete collection of Eric Clapton recordings can come alive! And it arrives complete with two mini-jacks, meaning it works with your iPod and headphones. When you have sound this great, why share? (arcam.co.uk)

ASK ANYTHING

Q How many watts do I need?

A The human ear perceives volume changes in increments of three decibels (dB), with background noise clocking in at 35 dB and a jet engine hitting 180 dB. With audio equipment, an increase of 3 dB requires a doubling of a device's wattage—so, no, a 200-watt system doesn't sound twice as loud as a 100-watt source. Most home theaters in a box advertise the sum of the individual channels plus the subwoofer. For a 160-watt system, subtract 35 watts for the subwoofer and divide the remaining 125 watts by five speakers and you're left with a measly 25 watts per channel. How much is enough? "We recommend at least 50 to 100 watts per channel for AV," says Craig Eggers of Dolby Laboratories. So next time you go to Circuit City, don't forget your slide rule.

A full-page photograph of Anderson Cooper standing in a desolate, post-apocalyptic landscape. He is dressed in a simple, elegant black turtleneck sweater and dark trousers. Behind him is a large, chaotic pile of broken and discarded televisions of various sizes. Some screens are shattered, and wires hang from the wreckage. The sky is a pale, hazy blue. The overall mood is one of stark contrast between the man's clean, minimalist style and the surrounding destruction.

Q HOW DO HOSPITALS DISPOSE OF BODY PARTS?

A If you've ever eaten hospital food, you probably have some theories. But it turns out limbs are typically disposed of much like entire bodies—they're cremated. After they're hacked off, the appendages are examined by pathologists at the hospital, then placed in refrigerated—and no doubt creepy—storage areas. When it's determined that limbs are no longer needed, they're placed in big red bags and incinerated. However, some patients maintain an, ahem, attachment to their amputated extremities and ask for them back. "Some people want to bury the entire body for religious reasons," says Meredith Goins of the Amputee Coalition of America. "Having the limb returned to you can also make it feel more final. So at many hospitals you can fill out paperwork and pick up your limb, assuming it wasn't an extremely traumatic injury." Plus, it gives Junior a surefire hit at show and tell!

Q HAS THERE EVER BEEN AN EVIL POPE?

A Good Christ, yes! Tales of papal violence, corruption, and illicit sex abound throughout history. Between 882 and 1046, there were a whopping 41 Popes, largely because they kept getting tortured and killed by Pope wannabes. John XII (955–64) allegedly boned not only his father's mistress but his own niece, and he castrated a cardinal. And before he got his pointy hat, Clement VII (1523–34) was known as the Butcher of Cesena for having

Clement VII—major Ozzy fan

3,000 women and children murdered after they objected to being raped by his soldiers. Thing is, bad behavior didn't really bother ye olde Catholics—they kind of liked their Popes naughty. "Pope Adrian VI [1522–23] was a ferocious reformer who cleared prostitutes from Rome and abolished carnivals," explains Lawrence Cunningham, professor of theology at Notre Dame. "When he died, crowds gathered at his doctor's house and erected a sign that read SAV-NIECE OF THE ROMAN PEOPLE. They couldn't stand the moral vigor." Much like certain Catholic school-girls we've, uh, known.

Q WHY ARE THERE 18 HOLES ON A GOLF COURSE?

A Golf courses are as integral to the Scottish landscape as vomit-soaked bars, so it's no surprise we have the Scots to thank for the 18-hole standard. The sport has been played since the mid-15th century, but it took a couple hundred years before courses evolved to a regular number of holes. The quintessential St. Andrew's Links, for example, consisted of 11 holes laid out from the clubhouse along the shoreline. Until 1764 a "round" there consisted of 22 holes—up and back. But as less time spent hitting the links meant more time for drunken brawling, thirsty Scots restructured the course. The result made several of the shorter holes longer, and an official round shrunk to 18 holes. That number was adopted throughout Britain, though some courses maintained different numbers of holes into the 1900s. The 19th hole was, not surprisingly, a product of American ingenuity. Cheers!

IT'S A FACT

Trust us. We wouldn't lie to you, handsome.

■ According to the American Society of Plastic Surgeons, 13,963 men went under the knife for breast-reduction surgery last year.

■ White Castle's 380 restaurants collectively sold a half-billion burgers last year, and judging by your gut, fatso, you had your fair share.

■ The first-ever phone book was issued in New Haven, Connecticut in 1878. It contained just 50 listings, and only 11 were private homes.

■ According to the Consumer Product Safety Commission, lawn mowers were responsible for 53 deaths in the United States in 2000.
